Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 company this weekend, at a nightclub in Harvard Square, Belle Linda Halpern will be singing her favorite selection from many popular music, threepenny opera from Pirate Jenny and some coming from West Side story. Right now, though, he's helping me with a presentation — and I'm bursting into a song. Halpern, cofounder of Cambridge-based Ariel Group, Inc., is an accomplished cabaret singer who still performs at least once a month. The rest of the businessmen coach at the time he introduced more effectively by communicating more emotionally. We follow your train of though and we admire you for your argument. But we want to connect with you as a person, we have to see how you feel about things. I turned to Halpern for advice on one thing I was determined to give to 80 people. It was, I realized, a well-structured presentation — so well structured that my audience could actually plan when to fall asleep. Introduction. A point. Point two. Conclusion. Pass the nodose. I thought I needed professional help. After listening to me, Halpern agreed. First, she said, I need more animation. Instead of using logic to make the transition (now that you understand my first thing, let me turn toward my second.) I should use expressive hand gestures and add emotional color to my face. I'm not suggesting that you're flamboyant, Halpern advised, but we have to see how you feel about things. So we tried to exercise. Halpern assigned me a theme (my neighborhood) and asked me to start speaking. Every 10 seconds he called a different spirit – love, hatred, humility, happiness – to which I made meaningful transitions. (I love the spirit of people and history in my neighborhood. I hate when I learn about a crime on my block.) Again and again, Halpern pushed me to communicate with devices other than my voice. If I was deaf - or in the back row - I should know from your body language what you're talking about, he explained. In fact, my voice was the next big challenge. Describing my voice as monotony assumes it has a tone in the first place. So it was time for another exercise, this one involving Shakespeare. Halpern asked me to recite a four-line route from the blizzard, adopting a different voice for each line. Don't be afeard (Ethel Merman screaming across the street); The isle is full of noise (from high talker Seinfeld whispering in his ear), sounds and sweet struts (James Earl Jones yawning), that give joy and not hurt (Kenneth Branagh playing a king). The idea, she explained, is to stretch your voice the same way you stretch a rubber band. It snaps back, but it's more flexible than before you spread it. The biggest problem, though, was my reluctance to pause - a common presentation flaw. I would like to do one thing and then rush into the example without letting the point sink in. I know that looks like vast amounts of stoppage time when you're there, Halpern sympathizes, but for the audience, a few seconds pause is generous. It says: 'I think it's quite important that you can give it a moment to take.' 'While I can't stand silence, she added, I should take some steps around the stage or take a drink of water. Whatever I do, the objective is the same: just stop talking. We finished our crash course by reconsidering our original presentation. Who would have thought it could be so fascinating? Introduction. Stop. Frightened face. Loud sound. A point. Stop. Excited hands. Strong voice. Point two. Stop. Closing. Applause. Sikelle and Ebert, where are you?
