In the current climate, well-being in schools is more important than ever. Emotionally Responsive Practice (ERP) services support school leaders and teachers in creating safe, responsive, and nurturing environments that help students cope with today's challenges. ERP also supports adult mental health, which is essential for educators to be able to ensure the well-being of children in their care. Our services are available either in person, virtually, or hybrid.

What Is Emotionally Responsive Practice?

Emotionally Responsive Practice at Bank Street, founded in 1995 by Lesley Koplow, LCSW, uses a deep knowledge of child development and a respect for each child's life experiences to create educational and caring climates that support emotional wellbeing and learning.

What Are Emotionally Responsive Schools?

Emotionally Responsive Schools have an enduring commitment to creating classroom climates that support emotional well-being as foundational for learning. In ERP classrooms, children learn that play, reading, writing, social studies, and art are all tools for self-expression, helping them make sense of the world around them and connect with others. ERP classrooms work to diminish stress, prevent social isolation, build community, strengthen identity, and heighten engagement in learning through reflective techniques and practices. The services below may also be available online according to your school's preference:

- ERP Coaching
- Consultation
- Teacher Support Groups
- Professional Development Series
- Parent Workshops
- Parent Support Groups
- Administrative Consultations
- Social Work Support Groups
