About The Piece

I was drawn to the poem's vivid, alluring stillness. In writing this piece I imagined a young traveler slipping quietly into the night, guided beneath the full moon to confide in a silent, trusted presence. From that image, a simple but mysterious piano motif unfurls into familiar melodies, echoing the moon's quiet pull and a sense of something just beyond reach.

Text

Thou silver deity of secret night,
Direct my footsteps through the woodland shade;
Thou conscious witness of unknown delight,
The Lover's guardian and the Muse's aid.

By thy pale beams I solitary rove,
To thee my tender grief confide;
My friend, my goddess, and my guide.

E'en thee, fair queen, from thy amazing height,
The charms of young Endymion drew,
Veil'd with the mantle of concealing light,
With all thy greatness, and thy coldness too.

By thy pale beams I solitary rove,
To thee my tender grief confide;
My friend, and my goddess, and my guide.
