You Are Who You Surround Yourself With

Nothing shouts so loudly about a society's success as do the lives of its children.

And the lives of our children are merely a reflection of adult values learned by observation, imitation and repetition.

And everything your children will ever be is who they watch, what they look at, what they read, what they hear and who they emulate as their mentors and celebrity role models.

We live in a skin deep culture.

It's an oxymoron.

Skin deep when we should be core deep because we have to pass on the values of this generation to the next so that we can continue to flourish.
