STRATEGIC PLAN FOR ARTS & CULTURE
CELEBRATING CREATIVE COMMUNITIES

a catalyst for positive change and increased quality of life for the people of Toledo
CELEBRATING CREATIVE COMMUNITIES
More than a year ago, through an open call to the Toledo community, The Arts Commission began a process to create a relevant, effective, and actionable plan for the arts and culture in our city.

The result of that process, Toledo’s Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture, identifies ten key objectives to advance the role of the city’s creative communities.

1 // EDUCATION

2 // PLACE-MAKING

3 // COMMUNITY DIVERSITY

4 // URBAN PLANNING

5 // CAPACITY BUILDING

6 // NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT

7 // SUSTAINABLE FUNDING

8 // COLLABORATION

9 // CULTURAL TOURISM

10 // DOWNTOWN REVITALIZATION
It was a great honor for The Arts Commission to collaborate in this multi-year planning initiative to create a system that supports cultural vibrancy, economic revitalization, and the rich network of creative life that makes our city unique. This strategic plan, the first of its kind since 2003, includes input from a diverse group of stakeholders, community leaders, educators, and creative individuals who care deeply about Toledo.

As facilitator of the plan’s development, our planning committee spent countless hours researching, writing, and engaging the community to create a focused outline that reflects the needs of the entire city with a special focus on the eight neighborhoods in and around the Downtown area. This was done to celebrate their unique qualities, reconnect cultural heritage, and strengthen our original suburbs. The result of those efforts has seemed to fan the flames of a transformation, inspiring individuals to assume an active role in urban activism. A positive sense of place in Toledo has been painted into this plan with the collective ideas and sincere voices of its residents.

The Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture, “Celebrating Creative Communities” sounds an important call to action. Embedded in its 10 objectives lies the opportunity for Toledoans to celebrate our strengths, improve the quality of life, and actively contribute to the future of Toledo. It is imperative that we absorb these objectives, set strategies in motion, and dedicate ourselves to tackle the challenges identified in this plan over the coming years. We do this together, with the people of our community driving revitalization on their terms, with our support.

Thank you to everyone who participated and contributed to the Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture, “Celebrating Creative Communities” – and to those who will continue to fulfill the goals of this plan. Together we can honor Toledo’s rich history by advancing arts and culture as a unified community.

VISION
“In creative placemaking, partners from public, private, non-profit, and community sectors strategically shape the physical and social character of a neighborhood, town, city, or region around arts and cultural activities. Creative placemaking animates public and private spaces, rejuvenates structures and streetscapes, improves local business viability and public safety, and brings diverse people together to celebrate, inspire, and be inspired”.
Kresge Foundation
Creative Placemaking, 2010

The City of Toledo has a long-standing history of strength in arts and culture. From the Toledo Museum of Art, one of America’s great art museums, to the City’s One Percent for Art program, from the birthplace of jazz greats Art Tatum and Jon Hendricks, to the emergence of the studio glass movement, the City of Toledo can be proud of its vibrant arts and culture community.

Arts and culture build community. They lend voice and shape to diverse cultural expression; they enhance educational attainment, strengthen quality of life, and attract business to our city. Creative industries are also a powerful economic sector that makes a substantial contribution to the region’s economy. In 2014 Northwest Ohio creative industries created an annual impact of $3.8 billion, sustaining over 30,548 jobs.* Advancing the arts and arts education can re-energize the economy and increase the overall prosperity of the community.

*2015 Economic Impact Study completed at Bowling Green State University.

PURPOSE
Through the arts, people share intangible ideas, innovative skills, and document unique manifestations of everyday life. Arts and culture are essential tools for community revitalization, having potential contributions to social, economic, and environmental aspects of urban life. Art related activities provide a medium so that the public can engage in city plan-making, growing local business, augmenting public safety, preserving cultural heritage, building diversity, strengthening quality of life, and increasing the overall prosperity of the community.

The Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture is an interactive document created over a 1.5 year process involving community engagement, research, and cultural assessment undertaken to develop a plan to unite and rejuvenate eight neighborhoods in and around Toledo’s downtown: Cherry Street Area, Dorr Street Area, East Toledo,
Olde North End, Old South End, Old West End, UpTown, and Warehouse District. Community meetings were held in each of these neighborhoods to gather ideas and input from the people who live and work there. Focus groups, online surveys, and stakeholder interviews were conducted to achieve a unified voice to express the ideas that make Toledo a more welcoming place. A committee appointed in November 2013 to oversee the plan’s development, crafted the following purpose: To identify downtown Toledo’s creative assets and challenges, define comprehensive objectives, and establish a plan of action to support arts and cultural development for years to come.

PROCESS

One concrete way we infuse the arts and culture into a community is cultural planning, a community-wide process of creating a vision for cultural programming and development. Another way is to ensure the health and vitality of cultural facilities in communities.

Americans for the Arts Culture and Communities, 2015

The 2015 Toledo Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture is the first in more than ten years, and the first ever to base its recommendations on input from Toledo neighborhoods in addition to arts and culture organizations, civic and business leaders, and other stakeholders. Funded by the Toledo Community Foundation, in a yearlong consultative process initiated by The Arts Commission in partnership with the Toledo Area Cultural Leaders group (TACL), hundreds of participants focused on strategies to strengthen the city’s future as a center of creative community-building.

From September 2013 to November 2014, consultant Martin Jarret led a five-person executive committee and twenty-one strong strategic planning committee representing thirteen arts, culture and community organizations to establish ten strategic objectives. First, an online community survey to identify pressing issues generated 140 responses. In parallel, seven focus groups – The Arts Commission staff, TACL, artists and art activists, young professionals, arts and culture supporters, educators and diversity in the arts representatives - met to contribute ideas to the plan. Jarret and Americorps member, Rachel McCartney, also conducted twenty stakeholder interviews, anonymously reviewed and integrated by the executive committee. As importantly, the executive committee conducted meetings in eight neighborhoods or areas adjacent to downtown Toledo: Cherry Street, Dorr Street, East Toledo, Old South End, Old West End, Olde North End, Uptown and the Warehouse District.

The executive committee invited feedback from participants on their contributions, and materials used by committees were always referred back to neighborhood leadership for checking before sharing. The results were integrated into the draft strategic plan presented here. The draft objectives were submitted to the Toledo Community Foundation and the final plan was shared with the citizens of the Toledo Region in 2015.

At the core of the strategic planning process lay a deep commitment to affirming the arts and culture as engines of urban revitalization, community identity and economic success, and gratitude to a community devoted to the arts.

The “Cherry Street Area” is a title used in the research conducted in this planning effort, and is one of two “areas”, rather than neighborhoods on which the team focused. The Cherry Street Area includes the neighborhoods of Toledo Olde Town and Warren-Sherman. It also includes the Cherry Street Legacy Area, which surrounds the Mercy St. Vincent Medical Center extending into the Olde North End, and is the focus of the beautification, safety, and community development efforts of Mercy St. Vincent’s Medical Center.

Toledo Olde Town and Warren-Sherman are both largely residential. While distinct in their own ways, they share many of the same qualities and struggles. The neighborhoods boast many historic homes and buildings, preserved and protected by dedicated citizens and the families who have fought against the vacancy and blight of recent years. Both neighborhoods are largely low-to-moderate income, and struggle with keeping their neighborhoods safe for their families amidst the conflict of residential dynamics interspersed with commercial corridors. There are many businesses along Cherry, Bancroft, and Monroe, but few are locally owned, and many are convenience-oriented, which presents its own set of challenges for residents.

Mercy St. Vincent Medical Center is a stronghold of the communities, as is Jesup W. Scott High School, which underwent a $42 million renovation in 2011. Scott High School is one of four hub schools in the Toledo Public School system, which work to serve the whole community as a gathering place for families, new ideas, critical discussion, and best practices in all areas of life, including arts and culture. Other anchors in the area are Central Catholic High School, Wayman D. Palmer YMCA, and Rescue Crisis.

Obstacles discussed among the group included both the perception and reality of crime in the area, making it a hard sell to potential homeowners needed to rebuild the neighborhood. Racial and income segregation of surrounding neighborhoods, causing inequality in funding and other resources, was also a priority concern. Also discussed was the disappointment that area neighborhoods have not worked together in the past for the good of all, and a desire was expressed to improve this situation.

The group came forward with several strategies to grow arts and culture in their neighborhoods. Among them was the construction of five new roundabouts in the Cherry Street Legacy Area which offers opportunities for beautification. Much discussion transpired among area stakeholders concerning the need for a thoughtful redevelopment of the former site of Fulton Street School demolished in 2010. Neighbors also expressed a desire for more bike and pedestrian infrastructure, bike-friendly events, and formation of a stronger partnership between Scott High School and the Collingwood Arts Center. Partnerships with the Toledo-Lucas County Land Bank and other agencies have been established to tackle blight abatement and productive repurposing of many lots and buildings.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

The community meeting held in November 2014 at Scott High School was attended by almost thirty people from the neighborhood, the school, and area organizations.

The neighbors agreed that the area has many assets, including strong churches, Grace Community Center, businesses, unique architecture, a young population passionate about the arts, and proximity to Old West End arts and culture resources. Neighbors’ faces lit up talking about Toledo Jazz Station 88.3FM, which is broadcast from Scott High School’s state-of-the-art recording studio and produced in part by the students in partnership with the University of Toledo.
CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS

Through the work of many organizations, the Cherry Street Area now boasts forty new homes developed by Neighborworks® Toledo Region on vacant lots. The Cherry Street Legacy Project continues to hold monthly meetings to address issues such as further redevelopment of residential and commercial areas, community safety and beautification.

In the summer and fall of 2014 a Success Measures® Survey was completed with interviews from nearly 200 households door to door. Questions about public art were asked. Recently, several pieces of public art were added in or around the neighborhood. These include a new mural on Collingwood and Delaware on the south wall of Black Kite Coffee and Pies, a new local artist-designed bike rack through The Arts Commission’s Art in Public Places, and a photographic mural on the side of an auto repair shop across the street. Flower pots were added to this intersection at all four corners. For the most part, these installations were received positively by residents. When the respondents were queried regarding their perceptions of the impact of public art in the neighborhood and their preference by category their responses were as follows:

Neighborhood Report

Dorr Street Area

The “Dorr Street Area” is one of two center-city focus areas in Toledo’s arts and culture plan research that encompass several neighborhoods along a corridor rather than honing in one. In the case of the Dorr Street Area, research was collected from residents and organizations living and working along Dorr Street from where it begins at the intersection at Collingwood near the Toledo Museum of Art to the University of Toledo. The lion’s share of interaction and research was focused on the Junction Project, a very active and engaged neighborhood area roughly bounded by Dorr, Collingwood, and Detroit Avenue on three sides, and the railroad and Swan Creek to the south.

Dorr Street was once the epicenter of black culture, music, and entrepreneurship in Toledo. There were over seventy black-owned businesses, including jazz clubs and theatres where legends such as Art Tatum, who grew up in the neighborhood, made American music history. There were also clothing stores, restaurants, offices and many other businesses that made the area vibrant and full of life. In 1976, a highly controversial Federal Urban Renewal project began which forced these businesses and the homes that surrounded them on Dorr Street to relocate before razing over three hundred and fifty structures in order to widen Dorr Street, right in the heart of the district that ran between Washington and Smead Streets.

The hole that was left in the wake of the demolition not only drastically affected the surrounding neighborhoods, it was a terrible blow to the whole black community of Toledo, and crippled Toledo’s proud and thriving jazz culture. The effects of this drastic and highly destructive action can be felt acutely to this day.

The music and the sense of community live on in the many strong churches and the families that live there. Many community organizations and schools have rallied to keep positive change moving forward in the neighborhoods. Several major planning projects have contributed to restabilization and improvement of the area, including the most recent, the 2009 Dorr Street Visioning Project, collaboration between the University of Toledo, Toledo LISC, and multiple additional partners.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

While much of the preparation for the Dorr Street Area arts and culture community planning meeting was done at the monthly Junction Project meetings at Frederick Douglass Community Center, the meeting itself was held at Pickett Academy on Blum Street, one of Toledo Public Schools' four hub schools. Neighbors shared dinner and spoke about the assets, obstacles and opportunities in the area.

Some assets listed were access to Swan Creek, the Art Tatum house, where the jazz great grew up, local churches, the Frederick Douglass Community Center, the Elks Lodge, Pickett Academy, small businesses, and the recent change through the Gateway project that shifted the University of Toledo’s front door from Bancroft to Dorr Street. The African American Legacy project is transitioning to a new building on Dorr and Collingwood, and residents enjoy the proximity of the neighborhood to the Toledo Museum of Art. There is a lot of excitement about the new Red Velvet Jazz Club, which caters to the 35 and over crowd. The Chessey Circle and University Parks Trail are also assets of the area, and neighbors expressed desire to expand and link these bike and pedestrian trails.

Obstacles voiced by the group included the I-75 barrier between neighborhoods, lack of funds to sustain and follow through on previous planning efforts, and the loss of ONYX (Organized Neighbors Yielding Excellence), a once effective community development organization that closed in 2012. Residents expressed a desire for more safe meeting spaces and better communication among community leaders. If the leaders were more connected, residents said, better relationships could be built with organizations and collaborators that have some of the same interests as the neighborhoods.

CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS
Thanks to the efforts of the neighborhood to identify goals and act on achieving them together, 2014 was a big year in terms of arts and culture efforts in the area. Several new community gardens have been established, including one across from the Frederick Douglass Community Center, and the completion of an outdoor classroom at Pickett Academy.

For the second year in a row, the United Way Day of Caring has centered on the Junction neighborhood, resulting in cleanup and beautification, new community-designed murals along Junction Avenue, and renovations to the Soul City Boxing and Wrestling Gym, which has recently expanded programming aimed at keeping area youth engaged in empowering activities and out of trouble.

Toledo Area Council of Governments (TMACOG) has also been partnering with the neighborhood to increase green space in the area, and has plans to build several rain gardens, which will help control storm water as well as beautify the neighborhood. The Lucas County Land Bank has inventoried vacant land and buildings as part of the Toledo Survey Project, and is working side by side with residents to find the best way to repurpose and reclaim these properties as assets for the community.

Residents are working on improving lighting in the area to discourage crime and improve safety. Residents also see a big opportunity in better use of the Art Tatum house, which is currently not open to the public. A marketing push could make Toledo more aware of this asset and transform the home into an educational resource for Art Tatum’s legacy.

East Toledo lies across the Maumee River from Downtown Toledo. In addition to being connected by water to Lake Erie, three bridges span the Maumee to East Toledo, making the community a vital industrial center surrounding the Port of Toledo.

The East Toledo Historic District is located across the Martin Luther King Jr. Bridge opposite Downtown Toledo, surrounded by commercial corridors. The area is full of historic churches, homes, and public buildings, such as the Weber Block building on Main Street. The Craig Street Bridge lands in Birmingham, near to the Birmingham Historic District. This area is the home of the Birmingham Ethnic Festival, which marked its 40th year celebrating the Hungarian heritage of that area in 2014, and the famous Tony Packo’s Restaurant, known far and wide for its Hungarian hot dogs. The Anthony Wayne (or Hi-Level) Bridge carries traffic across the Maumee River from the Warehouse District and South Toledo to the southern edge of International Park and the surrounding neighborhoods.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

Present at the meeting were representatives from neighborhood groups, city government, East Toledo arts and culture organizations, local schools, and local businesses. Residents discussed the strengths of the Main Street business district, their Hungarian pride and heritage, the construction of the National Museum of the Great Lakes on the waterfront, the recent activity of the new LeSo Gallery on Starr Avenue, historic architecture, strong public schools, public sculpture and murals.

There were two major obstacles to arts and culture development on everyone’s mind that evening. The first and most deeply felt frustration was waiting for the Marina District development, a project which started with the 2012 demolition of the Acme Power Plant and subsequent sale of the city-owned Maumee Riverfront parcel to investors. East Toledoans, feeling the strain of the great recession on their local economy, were very hopeful that this project would revitalize the area, and then disappointed when the development was delayed.

The second obstacle was the imminent closing of the Anthony Wayne Bridge for major structural repairs that would shut the major route to and from East Toledo down for almost two years. These two hurdles, combined with the aftermath of coping with the loss of major manufacturing, industry, jobs and housing values, made the group wary of promises of change, but equally determined to find their own unique solution to use their wealth of resources to restore and grow their neighborhoods.

The group began to talk about how all of these elements could come together, through unity of neighborhoods, schools, arts and culture organizations, government, and business, to form a revitalization strategy focused on East Toledo arts and culture. Residents considered the advantages of having a new gallery (the first ever in East Toledo), a new national museum, and proximity to the Maumee River and Downtown Toledo, took the two biggest obstacles facing them, and transformed them into the key elements of a new plan.

They would concentrate on making Main Street and Starr Avenue Corridor, a thriving arts, entertainment, and business district. They would use the increased traffic on the MLK Bridge to Main Street, due to the Anthony Wayne Bridge shutdown, to gain exposure for the revitalized arts district. They would not wait for the Marina District development; instead, they would create a strong foundation that would attract artists, homeowners, and businesses. When the Anthony Wayne Bridge re-opens in December 2015, they plan to be ready for an influx of traffic, investment, and contribution of their rich assets to the City of Toledo in a new and exciting way.

CURRENT STATE OF ARTS & CULTURE PLANNING IN EAST TOLEDO

Since the community meeting in November 2013, East Toledo arts and culture has seen enormous progress. A group called the East Toledo Creative Corridor has formed, comprised of many of the same individuals that attended the community meeting. This group has beautified Main and Starr Streets by painting murals, painting trashcans, planting flowers, improving parking, helping to inventory vacant property, and encouraging new businesses to set up shop there as well as strengthening existing businesses.

The group’s biggest endeavor so far has been the advent of “The Main Event” music and art festival, held for the first time in 2014 between Front and Fourth on Main Street, which boasted over 50 performers, pop-up galleries in vacant storefronts, a beer garden, and local food, and drew 3,000 festival-goers to Main Street.

The National Museum of the Great Lakes, which includes the John S. Schoonmaker Museum Barge, opened in the spring of 2014.

CONTINUITY WITH 10 GOALS

East Toledo’s recent activity exemplifies the overall goals of the Toledo Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture. Through collaboration across sectors and creative thinking, residents have rallied to magnify their strengths and address their weaknesses through hard work and advocacy for better quality of life for Toledoans on both sides of the Maumee River. They are creating a place-based arts and culture engine that will fuel business development and attract more residents and tourists to the waterfront, all the while increasing quality of life for those already invested in the area.

The Olde North End (ONE Village) is a group of neighborhoods within a rough triangle between Cherry Street, I-75 and the Maumee River. The neighborhoods, Polish Village, Lagrange, North River, and Vistula, decided in 2009 to unite under the name of ONE Village concurrent with the merging of the community development corporations in the area into United North. In addition to being recognized as a national district, there is also local historic designation to help preserve the character. ONE Village is home to the Lagrange Street Polish Festival, which celebrated its 30th year in 2014. Proceeds from the weekend-long festival fund neighborhood programs such as scholarships and home renovation and repair.

The Ohio Theatre was built in 1921 and is now owned and managed by United North. Major renovations are underway to the historic building, and it is the center of arts and culture for the area, located in the heart of the Polish Village. The Vistula Historic District, boasting many beautiful Victorian homes, was established in 1833, four years before the settlements of Port Lawrence and Vistula merged to form the city of Toledo, making it Toledo’s oldest neighborhood.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES
Neighbors and stakeholders of ONE village gathered at the Ohio Theatre to discuss arts and culture planning in their area, and identify the assets and obstacles that could be transformed into more opportunities for this engaged and organized group of neighborhoods. Major assets brought forth were the theatre and its programming, the annual Polish and Greek festivals, the historic character of the neighborhoods, and the ample parks in the area. Woodward High School was praised as an excellent arts and culture resource, as well as Leverette Elementary, one of the four Toledo Public Schools’ hub school locations. Other assets listed were the Young Artists At Work murals on Lagrange Street, the Caldwell and Friendly Community Centers, and Stanley’s Market.

Residents shared concerns about environmental obstacles such as high crime and the lack of bike and pedestrian friendly zones. Residents also recognized a lack of marketing resources needed to promote events, especially since many individuals are wary to participate in new programs when past programs have failed. Residents felt more staff is needed in organizations to ensure the success of arts and culture and other community programs in the area.
The group also identified many opportunities for the neighborhoods, like supporting young artists in non-traditional mediums, establishing live/work and maker spaces, in the area, and creating murals to beautify and celebrate the rich history of ONE Village. Summit Street, which runs along the Maumee Riverfront and borders the Vistula Historic District, is another opportunity for growth and development. Summit Street is home to an artist studio along Water Street and also hosted The Arts Commission’s 2013 Artomatic419! event however, residents would like to see that area become a strong center for arts and culture, building on the assets already in place.

CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS

The Strategic Plan for Arts and Culture effort coincides with ONE Village’s development of a Quality of Life Plan for the area, which will also be released in 2015. Completion of renovations to the Ohio Theatre will make programming more accessible and beautify Lagrange Street. The neighborhoods are also working with the Lucas County Land Bank to redevelop vacant properties to enhance the appearance, improve livability, and possibly include an artist residency program.

Neighborhood Report

Old South End

The Old South End is one of several neighborhoods known as South Toledo, which stretches from I-75 to the City of Maumee along the Maumee River. The Old South End is the nearest of the South Toledo neighborhoods to Downtown, and in recent years has been the most active in arts and culture development, thanks in large part to the efforts of Latino residents and organizations who have come together to celebrate and promote their cultural heritage and local artists.

The area is a low-to-moderate income neighborhood with many single-family homes and several business corridors, and was especially hard-hit by the recession, burdening the area with increased vacancy, blight, poverty, and crime. There are strong, historic churches and schools in the area, which have held up the struggling community. The community enjoys many assets, among them local and diverse restaurants, some of which showcase local art, the Toledo Zoological Gardens, and the long stretch of Maumee Riverfront the neighborhood lies beside, with many parks and beautiful homes along the waterfront.

The most spectacular visual change in recent years has been the Broadway Avenue corridor murals, now more than fifteen in number, that begin on Broadway near the Anthony Wayne Bridge and continue throughout the Old South End.

These murals are the work of many groups working in tandem, such as the Organization of Latino Artists (OLA), The Sofia Quintero Arts and Cultural Center (SQACC), Bowling Green State University (BGSU), and The Arts Commission, along with other organizations, and many individuals. Along this corridor, the many events, urban agriculture projects, façade restorations, and housing solutions have made the Old South End a vibrant and growing neighborhood, fighting its challenges with beauty and community togetherness.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

The well-attended community meeting to plan for arts and culture in the Old South End was held at a First Friday event at the SQACC on a below-zero night in February of 2014. This did not stop the community from showing up and voicing ideas, concerns, and perspectives on critical elements of neighborhood progress.

Unique assets valued by the residents and community leaders in attendance were the area’s rich history, the strong Latino and Chicano culture and community in the area, inter-generational cooperation, and a bevy of local performing, literary and visual artists and community organizers. Neighbors also discussed the murals, which have had such a positive impact on community life and contribute so much to Toledo’s arts and culture heritage, the Maumee Riverfront, the Zoo, and green spaces like Walbridge Park.

Challenges for the Old South End have included blight, negative cycles of crime and gang activity, lack of outreach and recruiting for staff and board members by arts organizations to the Latino community, unemployment, and scarce funding.

There were many ideas for arts and culture strategies to overcome challenges, such as infill on Broadway to strengthen and sustain the neighborhood, working with the Lucas County Land Bank to tackle blight and vacant building issues, strengthening the visual art, culinary, agriculture, and resource programs at SQACC, and repurposing some space in the minimally used Toledo Transportation Center, which has declined as passenger trains have dwindled.

Neighbors also wanted to strengthen partnerships with government agencies, arts organizations, and others to create more opportunity for the neighborhood and secure better representation of the Latino community in Toledo.
CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS

The Old South End has continued to grow and find new resources and people with which it can share its rich culture and wealth of arts activity. The murals continue to proliferate. Among the most recent are a mural of the Green Lantern and portraits of Cesar Chavez and Martin Luther King Jr., a collaboration between SQACC, BGSU Students, and Mario Terero, a San Diego artist who also led the design of the I-75 overpass murals in 2010. OLA continues to organize and carry out community art projects, despite the loss of one of its most beloved members, Jose Martinez, who passed away suddenly in late 2014. Jose was very active in this arts and culture planning effort, and will be greatly missed.

The 18th annual Dia de los Muertos event was held by SQACC in 2014, and the center’s culinary and agricultural programs continue to expand, in partnership with Toledo GROWS and the Lucas County Land Bank. The Believe Center and Adelante continue to offer resources and programming to the community, and Jose Martinez Memorial Galeria showcases local talent and cultural exhibitions. National funding is being sought by dedicated researchers and grant writers in the community to sustain and continue the work underway.
Toledo’s Old West End is situated just west of the Downtown neighborhoods, forming a triangle bordered by Monroe Street, Collingwood Boulevard, Detroit and Central Avenues. In addition to being recognized as a national district, there is also a local historic designation to help preserve the character. The Old West End Historic District has slightly tighter boundaries, and is the largest intact collection in the United States of early Victorian and Edwardian homes east of the Mississippi River. Arts and crafts and Gothic architecture are also present in this dazzling neighborhood, which saw the bulk of its growth in the late 1800s and early 1900s as Toledo boomed with industry. Many wealthy citizens of the era moved out of the Downtown into the trendy new neighborhood which is now the Old West End.

The Old West End of today is known for its diversity of population in terms of income levels and race, and its high concentration of artists of all kinds, who find a strong, family friendly community in the historic neighborhood.

The major arts and culture event in the neighborhood is Old West End Festival, held in June, which celebrated its 43rd year in 2014 and also celebrated the 25th year of Tours de Noel. Centers of arts and culture in the Old West End include the Agnes J. Reynolds Arboretum, where concerts and events are held throughout the warmer months, and the Collingwood Arts Center, a massive former convent and women’s college which houses the Lois M. Nelson Theatre and Children’s Theatre Workshop. Old West Enders relish the presence of The Toledo Museum of Art at the south end of the neighborhood. The museum campus also houses the Toledo Symphony Orchestra and The Arts Commission, which provide additional access to arts and culture.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

The community meeting held at the Collingwood Arts Center in January 2014 came at a crucial moment. It occurred shortly after the Center announced that it could no longer support its artist residency program due to lack of resources to make critical repairs to the historic building. Most of the affected artists were present at the meeting, along with friends and neighbors from community groups, schools, and other organizations. Due to the special circumstances, the group was invited to discuss at length the issue at hand, as well as share their thoughts on other aspects of arts and culture planning in Toledo.

The group of almost sixty community members identified the following assets in the Old West End: strong churches and schools, a vibrant and supportive creative community, the many arts and neighborhood organizations in the area, green spaces such as Old West End Commons and Macelwane parks, ongoing redevelopment and road repair, and its abundance of unique historic homes and buildings that are the pride of the neighborhood.

The chief obstacles brought forth were lack of funding to maintain the wealth of arts activity in the area (including funding for artist housing and studio space in good repair), lack of access to a local grocery store and fresh food, and a frustration that arts and culture marketing and outreach does not connect the whole community. Some residents expressed that while the neighborhood is known for its racial/ethnic/income diversity, discrimination in regards to equal treatment and access to resources needs to improve.

The group listed many opportunities for growth, including re-purposing vacant land and buildings for community and creative use, promoting film industry locations in the Old West End and elsewhere in Toledo. Neighbors spoke of the importance of strengthening connections between the neighborhood and the Toledo Museum of Art, engaging youth from all walks of life in arts and culture activities, and building and connecting existing bicycle and pedestrian infrastructure. Steady growth of the Old West End Festival was also discussed, as was encouraging visitors to come from outside of the neighborhood through volunteer recruitment and securing outside funding for expanded efforts.

CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING IN THE OLD WEST END

Since the January 2014 community meeting, the Old West End has been active as ever in advancing arts and culture within the neighborhood. A new mural on Collingwood and Delaware was completed in the summer, and at least one new business will open in that same building, home to Black Kite Coffee and Pies, which supported the mural and holds arts events regularly. A new local artist-designed bike rack, poetry sidewalks, and new mural benches have also been installed in the Old West End through The Arts Commission’s Art in Public Places and Young Artists at Work programs. Collingwood Boulevard rebuilding is nearly complete, including a median sculpture foundation for a new sculptural addition to Toledo’s public art collection, to be installed in the spring of 2015. The Professional Building, home of The Arts Commission on the Museum campus, also has a new mural, designed and painted by youth employed in the Young Artists at Work program.

The Collingwood Arts Center has undergone many changes in programming and offerings to the community to gather and engage, including a Food Truck Festival, home of the Bird’s Eye View Circus and ghost-hunting activities. New leadership is in place, and efforts are underway to raise funds to repair and maintain the building.

CONTINUITY WITH 10 GOALS

The Old West End residents have enthusiastically participated in the formulation of this plan and its goals. With a focus on holistic change through arts and cultural placemaking, the Old West End makes strides to coordinate arts and culture efforts with schools, churches, organizations, and residents on a grassroots level. Like many other parts of the city, the Old West End is committed to historic preservation of its many unique homes and buildings, and to the diversity and connectedness of residents and visitors who grace their streets and structures.
Neighborhood Report

UpTown

Just west of Downtown Toledo, UpTown is a largely commercial area currently known for its locally owned bars and restaurants and many events. The neighborhood has changed drastically over the past fifty years from a mix of mansions and single family homes interspersed with local businesses and serviced by several trolley lines to an area with many businesses and some apartment buildings. In 2005, the City of Toledo approved an Arts & Culture Village overlay district for Uptown. New events and businesses are attracting crowds with food, music, and fun. Demand for residential space is up, an encouraging sign for this neighborhood working its way through a hard won transformation.

UpTown is home to Mercy College, the Toledo Club, Toledo City Paper, Toledo School for the Arts and the Toledo-Lucas County Main Public Library. The Cherry Street mission is also located in UpTown, and the harmonious cooperation between mission staff and clients and UpTown businesses and residents is one of the areas addressed in the neighborhood’s UpTown Master Plan, which was adopted by the City in 2013.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

Held at Mad Ave Collective, a new shared creative space, the community meeting in UpTown was one of the most fast-paced and focused discussions with the eight focus neighborhoods in this plan. Representatives of the food and drink establishments, all locally owned, talked about the sense of community and stewardship that exists in Uptown. The strong music scene and growing street events on Adams Street were discussed as assets, along with seven murals, including the renowned “Toledo Love Wall”. Community gardens, a strong cycling community, proximity to amenities and new residential options make UpTown a community on the rise in terms of quality of life.

Obstacles being encountered by businesses and residents include sub-par lighting and bicycle and pedestrian infrastructure, exacerbating the outdated perception that UpTown is a dangerous area. Also discussed as an impediment to progress was buildings being held or managed by entities that refuse to improve them or restore them to productive use. Uncoordinated parking resources and lack of communication with social service agencies are also challenges to which UpTown stakeholders want to find a solution.
CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS

UpTown is making strides through organizing, promoting, and acting as a group to solve difficult problems, and increase livability and enjoyment of the area by residents and visitors. UpTown Green, a one-block area, has been redeveloped into a green space for the neighborhood to enjoy, and the remaining building is slated to become a mixed use property with a grocery store on the ground floor. The same building now has a large-scale mural by Ivan Kende, completed in the summer of 2014. The planning effort undertaken by the UpTown Association has brought the neighborhood together to tackle issues and move forward together. Buildings long mismanaged have been sold or are under new management, and are now working with the neighborhood, not against it.

There are new events on Adams Street every year, and some are becoming well established, including the Zombie Crawl, which in its fifth year in 2014, attracted over 7,000 people. Many businesses participate in and promote the 3rd Thursday Loops (formerly Art Walks and Gallery Loops) offered by The Arts Commission. In 2014 a neighborhood group of stakeholders from Adams Street businesses, such as the Ottawa Tavern, The Attic on Adams, and Manhattan’s, formed the “Village on Adams” to best utilize the overlay district and coordinate shared events and marketing.

Neighborhood Report

Warehouse District

Directly adjacent to Downtown, the Warehouse District is a neighborhood with a history that developed along with Downtown Toledo. As its name indicates, it is the location of many warehouses and industrial properties that supported Toledo’s strong manufacturing culture at its height. It has many historic buildings, two small historic districts, and an Urban Overlay District, which allows for an architectural committee to review plans for any development or construction in the area to make sure the character of the neighborhood is maintained.

Residential properties include apartment buildings for rent and condos, and units over storefronts rather than single family homes. The area has a multitude of restaurants, bars, and retail shops, as well as office space, and 5/3rd Field, home of the Toledo Mud Hens minor league baseball team.

Due to the national trend of exodus from downtowns to the suburbs, and big box stores replacing local businesses, the Warehouse District has had to fight to preserve its character, unique architecture, and economy, especially as the great days of Toledo manufacturing wound down and the previous and recent recessions hit.

And they have fought. The business owners, stakeholders and residents of the Warehouse District have made it a thriving place of culture, great food, entertainment, and more now than ever, a great place to live for singles and families.

COMMUNITY MEETING RESPONSES

Warehouse District stakeholders, business owners, and residents gathered in an art space in St. Clair Village, a stretch of South St. Clair Street which has undergone dramatic change in recent years through the efforts of many of the neighbors present at the meeting. Many assets in the neighborhood were listed, including new galleries and art-related businesses, artist studio space and live/work space, Huntington Center, hotels and accommodations, and the thriving Toledo Farmer’s Market, which expands in offerings and attendance every year. A wide range of restaurants, proximity to Downtown and surrounding neighborhoods, walkability, and the presence of anchor corporations such as Owens Corning promote tourism and provide stability in the area.

Obstacles faced by the Warehouse District have been the lack of a clear and easy parking and wayfinding system, building owners holding vacant properties, lack of code enforcement and inadequate lighting. Another challenge has been balancing ballpark traffic and events to benefit surrounding businesses, and making sure there is steady foot traffic, and not the “hit and run” the area sometimes experiences during ballgames and Downtown events.

When the discussion turned to opportunities, many people came with well-formed and long hoped-for ideas. Chief among them were the needs to make the area more pedestrian and bicycle friendly, coordinate marketing efforts for multiple events, and maximize the sustainable use and enjoyment of the Maumee River and Swan Creek.

The Warehouse District wants to plan for more green space, more murals, and attract young professionals and families. Residents want to find pathways to a more diverse neighborhood, by altering the way they look at marketing, recruiting, and building business incentives for entrepreneurs. There is also a great desire to connect on a more meaningful level with surrounding neighborhoods, strengthening relationships and sharing resources for the benefit of the City, rather than competing with one another.
CURRENT STATE OF ARTS PLANNING & ONGOING EFFORTS

The Warehouse District is home to many artist studios hosting their own arts and culture events, and several galleries showcasing local, national, and international talent. The Toledo Warehouse District Association (TWDA) led a planning effort in 2012 to unify and refine sustainable development of the many assets of the neighborhood, and hosts many events throughout the year. Wander the Warehouse, a walking tour of key locations, is organized by TWDA, and celebrated its 10th year in 2014. TWDA hosts many other social activities, membership meetings, and neighborhood functions throughout the year.

The Middlegrounds Metropark is under construction on the Maumee Riverfront, and the Anthony Wayne Bridge is undergoing a massive restoration concurrent with park construction. Residents are excited about increased traffic and green space to enjoy. The Gateway Project is also in the works, which will transform the I-75 exit that feeds into the Warehouse District from a confusing and bleak entrance into the area to a true Gateway, designed with the help of engineers and artists to put our best foot forward as people enter Toledo, while keeping in mind the needs of pedestrians as well.

The Warehouse District continues to participate in Art Walks, Gallery Loops, and other arts and culture events throughout the year. Community leaders expressed ideas of how to get more artists to live in the District and become more involved in neighborhood planning.

To help better understand the area’s residents, information about population, housing, and economics was collected using each neighborhood’s most prominent ZIP code. For the purpose of this study, the following ZIP codes were assessed: 43604 for the Warehouse District and Uptown, 43605 for East Toledo, 43607 for the Dorr Street area, 43608 for Olde North End, 43609 for Old South End, 43610 for the Cherry Street area, and 43620 for Old West End. Although the data acts as a brief snapshot of the neighborhood, it also illustrates diverse lifestyles from community to community.
