ABSTRACT

This research aimed to investigate the relationship between charismatic leadership style and service satisfaction. The research subjects consisted of 270 members of GBI Medan, and using a type of purposive sampling technique. This study employed a quantitative method, then the research data was carried out to collect a 42 items scale for charismatic leadership style and a of 40 items scale of service satisfaction. The research was analyzed using the Rank Spearman test thru SPSS version 25. 0 for Windows and the coefficient value was found 0. 817 and with a Sig. value of $0.000 \leq \alpha$, so the hypothesis was accepted with H_0 (rejected). This proves that there is a significant relationship between charismatic leadership style and service satisfaction of GBI Medan congregations. The Rank Spearman correlation interpretation suggested that a coefficient value between 0,70-0,89 signified a very strong relationship between the two variables, between supporting the rejection of H_0 and the acceptance of H_a . Therefore, it cluod be summarized that the research hypothesis, which stated a positive relationship between charismatic leadership style and service satisfaction, was accepted.
