Refusal to transfer is a worker's right as regulated in Article 32 paragraph (1) letter b of Law no. 13 of 2003 concerning Manpower. This article states that workers have the right to refuse changes to work conditions, including a change of place of work, if the changes conflict with the work agreement, company regulations, or law. This research is normative research. The data source in this research is secondary data. The data collection tools used in this research are document study and literature search. Data obtained from library materials was then analyzed by document study and using qualitative analysis. Based on the research results, workers or laborers can use Article 31 and Article 32 of the Manpower Law if they are transferred by employers or employers, whether the transfer is in conflict or not. The meaning of termination of an employment relationship according to Article 1 Point 25 of the Employment Law is: "Termination of an employment relationship due to a certain matter which results in the end of the rights and obligations between the worker or laborer and the entrepreneur." This termination of employment is based on the provisions of Article 150 of the Employment Law no. 13 of 2003 includes layoffs that occur in business entities that are legal entities or not, owned by individuals, owned by associations or legal entities, both private and state-owned, as well as social enterprises and other businesses that have management and employ other people with pay wages or other forms of compensation. If a transfer is rejected due to refusing a work order from the company, it can result in termination of employment (PHK). In Article 161 of Law No. 13 of 2003 concerning Employment, before implementing employment termination, the company will first send a first, second and third warning letter to workers/laborers in a company. Industrial relations disputes can be resolved through the Industrial Relations Court and outside the court, such as: Settlement of relations outside the court consisting of Bipatrit, Tripatrit, Mediation, Conciliation, Arbitration. If efforts have been made to resolve the dispute outside of court and an agreement or peace has not yet been reached, then you can resolve it through the Industrial Relations Court at the local district court as a final resort. The stages of resolving disputes in the industrial sector in the district court are filing a lawsuit and the examination process.
