Staff Writer

Coming straight from the practice rooms of Berklee, DotBox is taking Campus Crusade for Christ and the Boston area by storm. The band performs and writes their own worship songs for the

to play in front of thousands of Campus Crusade for Christ college students. When thinking about the band's experiences over the past school year, Rachael Howells says, "It's an experience that takes me outside myself and helps me to sing in an uninhibited way." Their sound is described as a fusion of blues and rock creating quite the collegiate group dedicated to spreading the message and teachings of Christ. Berklee students in the band include, Rachael Howells on vocals, Carl Sorensen on drums, Luke Price on guitar, vocals, and fiddle, and Jon Kolar on bass. Aside from playing at Boston conventions, DotBox traveled all the way to Florida over Spring Break contemporary spin to your average church hymn. DotBox will be performing at a Campus Crusade retreat in New Hampshire April 20th and 21st. The next time the band plans to perform in the Boston area is April 25th at the next Campus Crusade for Christ meeting at Harvard in Cambridge, so be sure to check them out.

Clear crisp vocals, melodic hooks, simple yet endearing guitar, and image inducing lyrics adorn Will Knox's songwriting. A British invasion of the best kind, Will's folk acoustic style has caught the ears of the Songwriting Department, MP & E Department and many fellow Songwriters at Berklee. Most recently, he was selected to be the featured songwriter by MP & E faculty for the George Massenberg recording session. He was also one of the winners for the Songwriting Dept. Annual Songwriting Competition,
