Local Support for National Service

Two weeks ago, Senators John McCain and Barack Obama shared their support for the power of national service to make a stronger America.

This Saturday, in CITY/TOWN a local event – one of 2,000 across America – will demonstrate the power of citizens to create change through volunteerism and service.

WHY This event is one of 2000 Day of Action events taking place across America to promote one important idea – that some of our greatest challenges can be addressed through national service.

Greater involvement in community and country through volunteering and full-time service is a powerful way to help Americans improve schools, protect the environment, promote public health, respond to disasters.

The nationwide Day of Action and the presidential forum are key elements of a movement for national service, led by ServiceNation a coalition of 110 organizations dedicated to strengthening America and addressing domestic challenges through civic engagement and service with a dramatic increase in Americans volunteering and choosing to commit a year of their lives to national service.

Please come to this event to learn more about what national service can do here. And learn more about ServiceNation at www.servicenation.org and see a list of events taking place across America at events.servicenation.org
