EMOTIONAL EATING STRATEGY

Recall what prompted your most recent emotional eating episode:

- ✓ Was it fear? Frustration?
- ✓ Was it anger? Despair?
- ✓ Was it insecurity? Loneliness?
- ✓ Was it feeling like you're just not good enough?
- ✓ Or did someone say something that made you feel like a small child who couldn't do anything right?

The Sad Truth About Emotional Eating

Food can distract you for a little while

As soon as you finish eating, the original hurt resurfaces, accompanied by a feeling of guilt or self-remorse.

You might add to your original upset

You caved and did what you told yourself you weren't going to do anymore, and you criticize yourself.

Reaching for food defies your best judgment

When you're in the middle of one of these emotional eating episodes, it doesn't matter how much logic you apply.

Get Out of Your Lizard Brain

- Portable Anchor System
- Shifts you into relaxed mode.
- Relaxed brains make logical comparisons and informed choices.
- Lizards can't compare and contrast, but high level thinking humans can.

Emotional Eating Worksheet

Spend some time in quiet contemplation and fill in all the blanks.

- Identify the feelings, circumstances, or problems that trigger you to eat emotionally.
- Name the foods that you generally eat as a result.
- How do you feel physically after eating these foods?
- How do you feel emotionally after eating these foods?
- What does eating these foods keep you from achieving in the long term?
- Does eating these foods solve the problem that triggered your emotional eating?
- What you can do instead to soothe the negative emotions?
- As a result of doing the alternate activity, how do you feel?
