

Now that you've graduated you no longer have to re-read texts from last night as a measurement of how fun your night may, or may not have been.

Sure waking up with sharpie all over your face, while wearing someone else's pants and finding the last number you dialed in your phone labeled as "future wife" makes for a good story, but now that you're getting older you need a different way of measuring a good time.

Welcome to adulthood, where you eat with cloth napkins not paper, and drinking doesn't have to involve cards or coins. Gone are the all-nighters and keg stands. Your ready for whiskey to taste good, not cheap, and you like it poured from a bottle that isn't made out of the same stuff a beer pong ball is.

Makers Mark has years of experience crafting their aged whiskey, and being the only distillery to rotate their barrels, ensuring that every barrel experiences the same aging process.

So cheers to your commencement into maturity. Let your alcohol choice reflect your years of practice and dedication to perfecting your craft of drinking, and let Makers Mark be your measurement of a good time.
