

Is there such a thing as dangerous love?

THE DANGERS OF INTERNET DATING
Wednesday 9pm Channel 4

The internet. It lets you send emails, create websites, order things online, chat to your friends. Basically the internet can do almost anything. Some of us love it; some of us don't even know how to use it. The majority of people using the internet are teenagers, with 21 million using it every day. But the big question is, are they using it safely? Tom Hartley, the presenter of 'The Dangers of Internet Dating', explores this problem further...

'Teenagers today always want to keep in touch with each other over the internet, the most popular website being Facebook. It seems that many teens are using an application (otherwise known as an app) on Facebook called 'Are you Interested?' But the new rising problem is that teenagers are signing up to proper dating sites and lying about their age. The bad thing about young teenagers doing this is that they have no confirmation that the image on screen is actual identification of the person they are meeting up with. Many incidents have occurred where teens have got themselves into trouble, but this is beginning to include the internet as well. Those who are meeting strangers from the internet don't understand that they might not be genuine and could be a threat. We need to address teenagers today and make this possibility of a dangerous situation known. The question is how can we do this effectively?

'The Dangers of Internet Dating' gives us an insight into what happens when you meet a random person without knowing them properly and warns us of the consequences. The documentary contains a gritty reconstruction of what happened to 'Holly Smith', who lied about her age and signed up to a dating website when she wanted to meet someone off the internet. Fake names have been used to keep the identity of both 'Holly' and the boy she met, - 'Matt', as he is known in the documentary, hidden.

"21 million teenagers use the internet every day"

The documentary is very 'fly on the wall'. 'The effect of the reconstruction was to make the audience feel like a bystander or witness', says Rebekah Harpham, the actress who plays 'Holly' in the reconstruction. 'We wanted them to feel a part of the reconstruction and add a realistic quality. The audience are wanted to be involved as much as the people acting are'.

Jacob Hall, the actor who plays 'Matt' provided his thoughts: 'I thought the general idea was really good for the documentary. It appeals to teenagers and adults alike and puts across how critical this issue on internet dating is. We documented what happens in the reconstruction near exact to how it happened in real life to 'Holly', making it seem like a soap was not going to make it become a serious piece of film'.

Tuning into this programme will make people realise that the internet can do most things but it can't

Samaritans

Provides confidential emotional support for people who are experiencing distress or despair.
Helpline: 08457 90 90 90 (24 hours a day, seven days a week)

Website: www.samaritans.org

sponsored by

SAMARITANS

Above: 'Matt'(Jacob Hall) and 'Holly' (Beki Smith) in a cafe

Left: Presenter Tom Hartley

Below: 'Holly'

Far bottom: The internet dating site 'Holly' used.

At match we're proud that every day
160 members leave us... as couples*
Start your love story

