(Agreeing/disagreeing; correcting; liking and preferring)

Equal opportunities is an area where many companies and many states have rules or legislation designed to protect specific groups from discrimination or unfair treatment. Such areas as terms of contract, wages and salaries, career prospects, job security and working conditions are affected by equal opportunities policies.

You are part of a discussion group which must produce recommendations to the Board on ways to improve the position of women in the company.

Note that:

- 58% of the 400 company employees are women
- only 5% of management positions are held by women
- the company has no policy on encouraging women to return to work after maternity leave, consequently only a very small number do return
- the Chairman has said he wants to improve the position of women in the company.

In discussion with a colleague, prioritize the following suggestions (from the most important to the least important) to create an enlightened and progressive policy for employment.
