

Announcing a reprint of our most sought-after title

You have limited time to order your personal copy of the Steam in Northern Ontario reprint

AFTER RECEIVING HUNDREDS OF APPEALS, WE ARE planning a short print run of Steam in Northern Ontario—provided there is sufficient commitment. Act quickly if you would like a copy.

Steam in Northern Ontario documents railway operations on the CNR mainline from the Don Valley in Toronto to Lake Superior

Behold Mikados and F-units hauling manifest freights through remote territory patrolled by school cars. Watch bullet-nosed Mountains with heavyweight cars of the Continental wend their way across a landscape of lakes, streams and evergreens as far as the eye can see.

Explore the switching operations of Consolidations handling pulpwood, lumber, coal and paper against a backdrop of log booms and pulp and paper mills between Longlac and Port Arthur. Travel behind a Pacific aboard an all-night local passenger train, an express extra or a weekly mixed. Observe the connections with the Ontario Northland at North Bay and the Algoma Central at Oba.

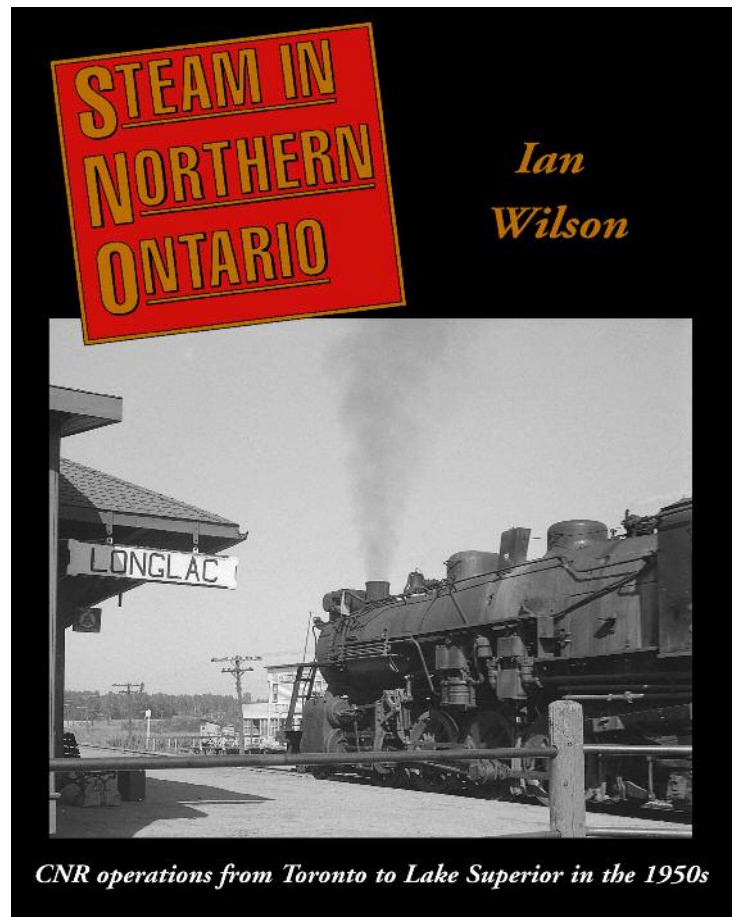

This is only our second reprint in 20 years

Sixth in a series of books by Ian Wilson documenting CNR operations during the 1950s, the 192-page Steam in Northern Ontario is laden with photographs, track maps, locomotive rosters, train profiles, time tables and descriptions of operations.

From section houses and water tanks at remote sidings to the coal docks, roundhouses, icing platforms and division point stations at South Parry, Capreol, Foleyet, Hornepayne, Jellicoe, Nakina and Armstrong, this is single track mainline operation at its finest.
