The sun is, in some sort, the only divinity of the Floridians;<sup>2</sup> all their temples are consecrated to it; but the worship which they render it varies according to the district. The Paraoustis of the neighboring towns come also to pay, ceremoniously, the last honors to the deceased.

They employ almost as much ceremony on the death of the ministers of religion,<sup>6</sup> who are also the physicians of the country, and who differ little from the medicine-men of
