

CONTENTS.

BOOK IV.

State of Quebec in 1610. Mr. de Champlain joins his allies in an expedition against the Iroquois. The settlement of the Dutch in New Netherland. Continuation of Mr. de Champlain's expedition. Indian want of precaution in war. Impostures of medicine-men. Reflection on this point. Discovery of a lake to which Mr. de Champlain gives his name. Lake of the Blessed Sacrament. The allies and the Iroquois meet and recognize each other. They engage. Victory of the allies, and Mr. de Champlain's share therein. Cruelties of the victors. Reception of the Montagnez in their village after their victory. Mr. de Champlain returns to France. Name of New France given to Canada. Second expedition of Mr. de Champlain and his allies against the Iroquois. Vigorous defence and defeat of the latter. The Count de Soissons puts himself at the head of Canadian affairs. His death. The Prince succeeds him, and assumes the title of viceroy of New France. The Recollect Fathers arrive at Quebec. Champlain's third expedition against the Iroquois. How to act with Indians. Attack on the Iroquois fort. Champlain is wounded and forced to retreat. He winters in the Huron country against his will. A Recollect Brother renders a great service to the colony. New France is greatly neglected. Marshal de Montmorency viceroy of New France. The Iroquois undertake to destroy the French colony. The Canada Company is suppressed. Quebec fortified. The Duke de Ventadour viceroy of New France. Five Jesuits arrive in Canada. A Recollect Father drowned, and his Huron companions suspected of causing his death. The Jesuits meet great opposition in Canada. Wretched state of the colony. Company of a Hundred Associates for the settlement of New France; its privileges, and what it undertakes. Hostility of the English. They demand the surrender of Quebec. Champlain's reply. The English capture a French squadron. Mr. de Champlain's embarrassment. Quebec again summoned by the English. Conditions on which the place surrendered. Good usage. Most of the settlers remain in the country. Emery de Caen, coming to the relief of Quebec, is captured by the English. A French Calvinist projector and guide of the English expedition. He dies frantic. Bad faith of the English