

CONTENTS.

BOOK XII.

Some of our allies attack the Iroquois. Bold and perfidious act of a Huron chief to break up the peace and involve the French more than ever with the Iroquois. He makes Denonville bear the burthen of his treachery. The Governor of New York prevents the Cantons from sending deputies to that general. State of trade in New France. Resumption of the project of establishing sedentary Fisheries along the St. Lawrence. Abundance of codfish and whales in that river. What prevents the French profiting by these Acadian coast fisheries. Great efforts of the English to divert the Abénaquis from our interest. The Chevalier de Callieres proceeds to France, and why? He presents a memoir to the Court; its contents. The King thinks of recalling the Marquis de Denonville, and why? What induced his Majesty to restore the Count de Frontenac to the general government of New France. His instructions in regard to Hudson's Bay. Recommendations as to Acadia. Orders concerning the expedition against New York proposed by the Chevalier de Callieres. Plan of this enterprise. Steps taken to insure success. What was to be done after the conquest of that province. Why it failed. Instructions given by the Count de Frontenac to Mr. de la Caffinière, captain in the navy, who was to besiege Mauhattan by sea. That captain, unable to throw provisions or munitions of war into Port Royal. The Count de Frontenac and the Chevalier de Callieres arrive at Montreal, and the condition in which they find it. Irruption of the Iroquois there; they perpetrate unheard-of cruelties and take many prisoners. They attack a fort and take the commandant after killing all the garrison. They are defeated. Project of these Indians in making the irruption. Denonville and Champigny decide to abandon and demolish Fort Catarocouy; their reasons. Frontenac's reasons for maintaining it. He makes great preparations to revictual it and reinforce the garrison. His other views on the subject. He moves too late. Just as his convoy was on the point of starting, he learns that Catarocouy is evacuated. New plans of the Chevalier de Callieres for the conquest of New York. What prevents the Court from accepting them. D'Iberville's expedition to Hudson's Bay and what led to it. His success. The Canibas undertake to wrest Fort Pemknit from the English. Their pious