

Iroquois. Our allies continue to push the Iroquois. Enterprise against Port Nelson, deferred, and why. Great preparations of the enemy. They approach Montreal. De Calliere's preparations for its defence. Action at La Prairie de la Madeleine. Exploit of Mr. de Valrenes. The defeat of the enemy. Loss on both sides.

BOOK XV.

The English propose neutrality. What induces them. Reply of the Count de Frontenac. Exploit of Oureouharé. Great, but ineffectual expedition against the Mohawks. Intelligence from Acadia. The Chevalier de Villebon made Commandant there. He takes possession of Port Royal. Attempt of the Iroquois to surprise Sault Saint Louis. Various hostilities. The Iroquois prevent navigation on the Great River, (Ottawa). They defeat a party of French and Indians, they are suffered to escape. They are pursued and some advantage gained over them. Frontenac proposes an expedition to the Ottawas, but they do not accept. New rumors of an English armament. The King sends a squadron to Newfoundland; it misses its object. Placentia attacked by the English. They summon the Governor. The attack begun. The siege raised. The Governor-General of New England attempts to have the Chevalier de Villebon carried off. He fails. Operations against Pemkuit. They fail. Condition of New France. Complaints against Frontenac. That General's anxiety, and its cause. Eight hundred Iroquois come to attack the colony. Precautions taken by M. de Callieres. The Iroquois retire without effecting anything. Irruption into the Mohawk canton. Success of the expedition. Our men attacked on the homeward march. Fresh tidings of a great English armament against Canada. Frontenac's embarrassment. Proposals of peace from an Oneida chief. The General's reply. Eight hundred Iroquois approach Montreal. They retire without doing any thing. What became of the English fleet that menaced Canada. Arrival of a great convoy of furs at Montreal. Frontenac prevents the Miamis from trading with the English. The English recover Fort Saint Anne on Hudson's Bay. Gallant retreat of two Frenchmen. The English compelled to retire from before Martinique in disorder. An Iroquois squaw comes to Quebec, to see the Count de Frontenac. Conversation and eulogy of this woman. New proposals of the Oneida chief. Frontenac's reply. Why he deferred pushing the Iroquois to extremes. Conduct of the English and Iroquois towards us. How Frontenac profited by them. The Iroquois again pretend a desire for peace. The French warned to distrust them. Iroquois deputies at Quebec. Result of this deputation. The Count de Frontenac makes an ineffectual effort to restore Fort Catarocouy. What defeats his plan. New negotiations with the Iroquois. Final reply of the Count de Frontenac. He dismisses the envoys well pleased. Return of Father Milet, and Tareha. Motives that induce the General to treat with the Iroquois. Some Abénaquis treat with the English: the Sieur de Villieu breaks