

BOOK XVII.

The Iroquois seek to amuse Frontenac. They renew hostilities. Troubles among our allies caused by bushlopers. Frontenac's embarrassment. How he extricates himself. Our allies come to the assistance of the colony. Exploit of a Huron chief. Complaints of the Indians. Frontenac's reply. The enterprise for which he was ordered to be in readiness. His advice as to the project. Plan of the enterprise against Boston. What defeats it. De Nesmond returns to France. Project of a sedentary fishery on the St. Lawrence. Description of Mont Louis. Its utility. What defeated the project. Effect of Frontenac's great preparations. He raises a force and disbands it. New royal ordinance against bushlopers. Frontenac remonstrates. Pontchartrain's reply. Several victories of our allies. Exploit of thirty young Algonquins. Death of Ourcouharé. His eulogy. First intelligence of peace received in Canada. Letter of the Governor-General of New England to the Count de Frontenac. Frontenac's reply. Conduct of the Mohawks towards Bellomont. The governor's proposition to the Iroquois. The Iroquois seem inclined to peace. Frontenac undertakes to gain them. Bellomont's second letter. Frontenac's reflections on this letter. His reply. Other English pretensions. Acadian affairs. Regulation of the limits for the southern coast of New France. Death of the Count de Frontenac. Attempt of the Iroquois to deceive the Chevalier de Callieres. The Governor's course. De Callieres appointed Governor-General. His character. Mr. de Vaudreuil, Governor of Montreal. Pretensions of the Governor of New England as to the Canibas. Conditions on which the Indians are willing to treat with him. Mr. de la Valliere and Father Bruyas sent to Boston. Bellomont still assumes to be arbiter of peace. De Callieres' policy to compel the Iroquois to make peace without him. The cantons resolve to do so. They are defeated by the Ottawas. What passed between them and de Callieres. Iroquois deputies at Montreal. Their propositions. The Governor-General's reply. Reception of the French ambassadors at Onondaga. Father Bruyas' address. Bellomont's attempt to thwart this negotiation. Several French prisoners refuse to return to the colony. Speech of Teganissorens to the French envoys. Mission of an English minister to the Mohawks. The ambassadors return to Montreal. Bellomont's renewed effort to thwart a peace. Reception of the deputies at Montreal. Their speeches in council. Chevalier de Callieres' reply. Provisional treaty signed on both sides. De Callieres' efforts to confirm peace. Bellomont wishes to force the Iroquois to receive ministers as missionaries. The establishment at Mont Louis fails again. Condition of Acadia. The establishment at Naxoat transferred to Port Royal.

BOOK XVIII.

New enterprise to find the mouth of the Micissipi. De Chateaurand and d'Iberville not received at Pensacola. D'Iberville's discoveries. He enters and ascends the Micissipi. Temple of the Bayagoulas. D'Iberville finds a letter from the Chevalier Tonti to Mr. de la Sale. English on the Micissipi. Possession again