

any harm, but that I will pray to God for thee, and that, when there are opportunities, I will do thee all the good in my power. As to my sister's property, I have it not; find out where she deposited it, and take it away; I would rather lose all that I have, than to see thee offend [106] him who has made all." He said sometimes to the Father who has more particularly instructed him, "Mortify me in public before the others, so that those who wish to be baptized may persuade themselves that one must exercise virtue when one is a child of God." Behold the glorious effects of grace. May God be forever blessed by men and by Angels, by Scythians and Barbarians, as well as by Greeks. Amen.
