

---

Nestaouip, who died —after an illness and constant sufferings extending over seven months—in a state of sanctity and innocence well-nigh unexampled even among civilized communities, where [22] corruption is far less prevalent than among these barbarians. This virtuous Christian preserved until death the innocence she had received at Baptism; and carried from this world the merit of a heroic patience, which she had always practiced from the time of her conversion.