

The owner of the land informed us that in plowing he had disturbed large numbers of human bones on Lot 5. This field being in clover we were unable to find any traces of this burial place. He had found here a number of large and well-finished stone celts, but not knowing what they were his children had destroyed them.

At the south end of the lake a number of plots of garden beds were found on Lot 7 of Section 26. This planting ground is located about 300 feet from the shore of the lake and covers about 10 acres of land. The ridges are very prominent being in places about 2 feet high. The paths between them are from 30 inches to 3 feet wide. (See Fig. 2)

The beds in the different plots run in different directions. All of the plots are closely connected with each other. The entire area is so densely overgrown with brush that to secure the dimensions, or a photograph of the beds, was impossible.

The shore line is here elevated about 60 feet above the lake and slopes eastward towards a swamp at the east end of Lot 8, and south to the planting ground.

On the following morning, September 6, we attempted to locate a small modern Pottawatomie Indian cemetery, which we were informed was situated at the northeast end of the lake. We were later reliably informed that this burial place consists only of the graves of two Indians, who, about eighteen years ago, during a drunken spree, were burned to death in their shack and buried at this place.

THUNDER AND GRASS LAKE MOUNDS.

(Plate 3)

Mr. James Plush had informed us of the existence of three mounds on land belonging to and adjoining his farm on the east shore of Thunder lake (Lot 3, Sec. 15, Stephenson township, Marinette county). After a careful search we found one, an oval earthwork measuring about 18x22 feet and having an elevation at its highest part of 2½ feet.
