

Additions

Page 49.—Gen. Bracken only acted temporarily as Adjutant of Dodge's battalion.

Page 57. Judge Lockwood died at Prairie du Chien, August 24th, 1857, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. "In 1842 or '43," says the Prairie du Chien Leader, "Mr. Lockwood united with the Episcopal Church at Prairie du Chien, of which he continued a member until his death. Some years ago, he was prostrated by a paralytic stroke, from which he never fully recovered.—Although debarred by the state of his health, in after life, from active personal efforts, he nevertheless took great interest in everything connected with the growth and progress of our city, and was fully alive to the necessity of promoting, in every way, those measures most conducive to its prosperity. He was taken ill suddenly, and from the first, but small hopes were entertained of his recovery. He lingered for about two weeks, and, on Monday last, 'gently yielded up the ghost,' and 'was gathered to his fathers'—passing from the cares and sorrows of earth to the awful realities of eternity. * * * On Tuesday, his funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends. An address was delivered by Rev. Alfred Brunson, who has been a resident of the place for nearly twenty-two years. He spoke of the long friendship which had existed between himself and his departed brother,—bound by the ties of common sympathy and interest as pioneers, and more especially as Christians; of the upright character of Mr. Lockwood in all his dealings; and very feelingly alluded to the fact that he was almost the only surviving member of that society, formed of Anglo-American citizens, during the early years of his residence here."