

teers and seven militia, will be attached to the guns, and be drilled daily, and now and then practice firing, under Serg't Keating of the Royal Artillery. A sufficient number of men will be selected from the Volunteers and militia, as mentioned above, to man the six-pounder, and the two three-pounders. Such men will be exempt from other duty till otherwise ordered.

Ordered, that eight of the Volunteers, including one Sergeant and one Corporal, mount guard daily; that the guards be relieved at seven o'clock every morning. That the guards take up their quarters, in the garrison, for the time being, and not absent themselves, on any pretence, without the permission of the officer of the day, whose business it will be to attend when the guards are relieved, and see that all the men are as clean as circumstances will admit of; and see that they have on them a cartouch-box and bayonet, that their guns are in good order, and that the sentries are regularly relieved by the Corporal.

Ordered, that carpenters be employed, and a party of the Volunteers, when not otherwise on duty, together with a party of militia, be kept on fatigue in order to repair the fort. When any of the inhabitants or militia are ordered with a team of horses or oxen, a reasonable allowance will be made them for such team. The militia, when on fatigue (provisions being scarce), will furnish themselves with food, for which an equivalent in pay will be made them. All men on actual duty will receive one gill of whiskey per day, till otherwise ordered.

Lieut. Porlier, of the Volunteers, and Lieuts. Graham and Brisbois of the Indian Department, will each, in turn, do the duty of officer of the day, having an eye on the garrison in general, keeping everything in order, and reporting to the Commanding officer, the state of the new guards when mounted, as well as every other material circumstance coming to his knowledge.

SEPT. 19th.—Ordered, that the men drilling at the guns, under Serg't Keating of the Royal Artillery, be all present, at the hours of seven o'clock in the morning, and three o'clock in the afternoon; and should any be absent, Serg't Keating will report them to the officer of the day, who will report them to the Commanding officer.
