

ATSSA PUBLIC AGENCY MEMBERSHIP FACT SHEET

Who are these public agency professionals that join ATSSA, what do they get, what do they bring to the safety table, and why do they keep coming back?

For the past several years, numerous state departments of transportation (DOTs) and other public agency firms and individuals have officially joined forces with ATSSA to improve roadway safety and help move Toward Zero Deaths.

ATSSA public agency memberships include traffic safety personnel from airports, cities, counties, DOTs, first responders including and law enforcement officers, research institutions, local and tribal technical assistance units, utility and other traffic-safety related entities.

Public agency members routinely form valuable local, state, and federal partnerships, that provide personal and professional value, stay better connected and benefit by:

- Developing better relationships with roadway safety subcontractors / industry members
- Accessing and/or obtaining feedback on potential specification changes from experts
- Learning about and monitoring roadway safety industry trends and innovative practices
- Helping industry more efficiently and effectively achieve important roadway safety goals
- Serving as advisors to potential roadway safety industry changes or concerns
- Access to a neutral forum for addressing various issues and/or safety initiatives
- Opportunities to actively participate and serve as safety advisors or peer reviewers
- Offering expertise by serving on national roadway safety committees and councils
- Receiving discounted training opportunities
- FREE educational Webinars on a variety of topics
- Access to 100 public agency scholarships to attend ATSSA's Annual Convention and Traffic EXPO
