Finalizing the composition of the three Museum Park towers, the building design reaches tall to anchor the northeast position of the site. Its orientation towards Lake Michigan helps to reinforce the urban grid, while respecting waterfront views from its neighboring towers. An expressive copper cladding top, acting like a horizontal spine to hide the building's infrastructure, directs the eye back to the building's taller, colonnaded banquet room at the leading east edge of the tower. The building offers a variety of floor plans with units ranging from 848 square feet to 3,149 square feet.
