Each hour of Hands-on Classroom study counts towards AAMI recertification points.

At Conquest Imaging, we take ultrasound service training very seriously and have dedicated a large portion of our corporate headquarters as a state-of-the-art service training facility to ensure you experience the right environment for learning. Our course materials and subject matter reflect the latest in ultrasound technology and equipment. You will learn from our best trainers in the classroom and work hands-on with various ultrasound systems to solve simulated technical problems. Check out this year’s training schedule to see just how you can expand your ultrasound knowledge base and increase your technical service skills.

AAMI Moves to Simplify Recertification Requirements:

In an effort to be more consistent with other certifying bodies, and to make maintaining certification less complicated and time consuming, AAMI is changing from a points-based system for certification renewals to one based on continuing education units, or CEUs.

With the new system, an hour of training equals one CEU in most cases. The process should be much easier for certified professionals to track, and it should reduce the amount of time it takes to remain certified.”

The new recertification system will take effect Jan. 1, 2017. For more information, please visit www.aami.org/aci_handbook.

What Else Has Changed?

- A minimum of 15 CEUs must come from professional development activities, such as attending a class, in-service, vendor presentation, webinar (live or recorded), or HTM conference sessions.
- No CEUs will be awarded for self-study or subscriptions to professional publications.
- Working full time during the three-year certification period yields 4.5 CEUs (1.5 CEUs per year—half a point more per year than under the old system).
• The ACI Board will audit randomly selected certified professionals to ensure compliance with the new process.
