No one likes conflict. Even people who claim to thrive on conflict or chaos do not truly enjoy it. We are not made to like it or enjoy it. The reason for that is because it was never the intention for mankind to deal with conflict. When God created the world and everything in it, He created it as "good" and for the good of the humans He placed into it. When sin arrived, conflict came with it and the world was never the same again.

Sadly, due to the fact that conflict is a part of our world, we all have to deal with it. Oftentimes, our conflict could be simply due to stress or frustration at work, at home, or even at church. However, in these times of conflict, we often lash out and bring others into our chaos. When we do that, we create a harmful and potentially hurtful situation that must be resolved. We are called to be peacemakers and that cannot happen without awareness and effort.

What do we do in moments where conflict is attacking our relationships? What do we do when a relationship feels damaged by the chaos surrounding it? How can we take steps to resolve conflict and reconcile relationships?

It is this congregation's hope that today as we study about colliding relationships, you are challenged and encouraged to reach out to those who could be struggling. Conflict is present (even in this building today) and our Lord never intended for us to be forced to live life in constant conflict. Pray that we all learn from the example of David today.

Thoughts of Gratitude

Dear Brethren, the family of Judy Hogan would like to express our heartfelt gratitude for all the texts, calls, cards, visits, food brought to our home, attendance at the visitation, funeral and graveside service, as well as all the food provided for the funeral meal, and especially all of your prayers. We are so thankful to be a part of this very loving church family.

We love you, Stan & Alison Hogan

I want to thank everyone for all the prayers, visits, calls, cards, and all the delicious food you brought to me. I would appreciate continued prayers.

Love you all, Ree Sides
