

Oh my God! What an eventful week it has been. Suddenly, after a great beginning to what was supposed to be a wonderful weekend - just the two of us alone finally - Mel wakes up in the middle of the night or rather very early Sunday morning with a fever of 105° . He was burning up and trembling. I immediately got him into a tepid shower and started him on some fever reducing medication. As soon as he got out of the shower I began applying the laying on of hands and transferring energy. My husband is of very strong will and body and with everything we were doing we managed to control the fever to some degree. Needless to say that Mel was in bed all of Sunday and by Monday he felt better - good enough to go to work - or so we thought. The fever came back with a vengeance with no other symptoms. We decided to go to see our doctor who happens to be a dear friend and graduate of the Silva Method. After many tests my husband was admitted into the
