Which wireless mic system is right for you?

VHF (very high frequency)

The VHF band offers low equipment cost. However, VHF is prone to interference from many sources. Due to the limitation of available frequency bandwidth, it is only feasible to operate, at most, two or three units simultaneously on traveling frequencies.

UHF (ultra-high frequency)

The primary physical characteristic of UHF radio waves is their much shorter wavelength so a shorter length of antenna is needed for UHF systems. The available radio spectrum for UHF use is almost eight times greater than for high-band VHF, so a greater number of systems can be operated simultaneously.

IR (infrared)

This signal is line-of-sight, so it does not transmit through solid objects. This is desirable when security is an issue, or when numerous systems are being used in the same building since the signal will not pass through walls.
