CHAPTER 1 CERTIFICATION OF BILLS AS MONEY BILLS

Introduction

1.1 This pamphlet is about the certification of bills as money bills and the provision made about such bills by section 1 of the Parliament Act 1911.

1.2 The decision whether or not to certify a bill as a money bill is one for the Speaker of the House of Commons (on the advice of the House Authorities). Reasons are not given for the Speaker's decision, and precedents are not necessarily binding.

1.3 A list of bills certified as money bills since the enactment of the 1911 Act is at the Appendix. It excludes: (a) Finance Bills which are often, but not always, certified; and (b) Consolidated Fund and Appropriation Bills, now Supply and Appropriation Bills, which are always certified.

1.4 A money bill is something distinct from a bill of aids and supplies. A bill can be certified as a money bill without being a bill of aids and supplies and not all bills of aids and supplies are certified as money bills.¹

1.5 Section 1 of the 1911 Act provides that a money bill sent to the Lords from the Commons at least one month before the end of a Parliamentary session is to be presented for Royal Assent, even though the Lords have not consented to it, if the Lords have not passed it without amendment within one month of its being sent up to them. The Commons have the power to direct to the contrary.

1.6 To date no bill has been enacted under section 1.

1.7 This chapter considers the definition of a money bill and issues connected with the timing of the Speaker's decision to certify a bill as a money bill and comments on Parliamentary Counsel's role. Chapter 2 considers presentation of a bill for Royal Assent under section 1 of the Parliament Act 1911.

Text of section 1 of the Parliament Act 1911

1.8 Section 1 reads as follows:

“Powers of House of Lords as to Money Bills.

- 1.-(1) If a Money Bill, having been passed by the House of Commons, and sent up to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of the session, is not passed by the House of Lords without amendment within one month after it is so sent up to that House, the Bill shall, unless the House of Commons direct to the contrary, be presented to His Majesty and become an Act of Parliament on the Royal Assent being signified, notwithstanding that the House of Lords have not consented to the Bill.
- (2) A Money Bill means a Public Bill which in the opinion of the Speaker of the House of Commons contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration, or regulation of taxation; the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on the Consolidated Fund, the National Loans Fund or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of any such charges; supply; the appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money; the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; or subordinate matters incidental to those subjects or any of them. In this subsection the expressions “taxation”, “public money”, and “loan” respectively do not include any taxation, money, or loan raised by local authorities or bodies for local purposes.

- (3) There shall be endorsed on every Money Bill when it is sent up to the House of Lords and when it is presented to His Majesty for assent the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons signed by him that it is a Money Bill. Before giving his certificate, the Speaker shall consult, if practicable, two members to be appointed from the Chairmen’s Panel² at the beginning of each Session by the Committee of Selection.”

Definition of “money bill” in section 1(2)

1.9 The government stated in 1911 that the purpose of section 1 was to restore the practice that had existed before 1909 under which the Lords did not, as a matter of convention, amend or reject certain bills while, at the same time, continuing to assert the right to amend or reject any bill. The definition of “money bill” in section 1(2) was designed to catch those bills which, as a matter of convention, the Lords did not amend or reject. However, even in 1911, the category of bills caught by section 1(2) was probably wider than the category of bills that, under existing rules of practice and convention, could not be amended or rejected by the Lords.

1.10 To see exactly what is, and is not, caught, it is necessary to look separately at each main element in the definition of “money bill” in section 1(2) whilst remembering that a bill is a money bill if it contains only provisions dealing with one or more of these elements subject to an exception for incidental subordinate matters. What is subordinate will be a matter of judgement in the particular context of each case.³

“Imposition, repeal, remission, alteration, or regulation of taxation”

1.11 It seems that the government, or at least Mr Churchill, intended this limb of the definition to cover everything to do with taxation and, in particular, to cover all aspects of administration by the phrase “the regulation of taxation”.⁴

1.12 In the case of the 1976 Finance Bill the inclusion of Schedule 6, which gave tax inspectors powers to demand information and search premises, did not prevent the certification of the Bill as a money bill. These provisions provoked complaints in the Lords that this was “tacking” within what is now Lords Standing Order No. 52 but the allegation was not upheld by the Practice and Procedure Committee to which it was referred.⁵

2. Section 1(3) was inserted by a Commons Amendment in lieu of a Lords Amendment. In the Commons and Lords Hansards and the Lords Journal, the reference is to the “Chairman’s Panel”. This also appears in the Queen’s Printer’s copies of the Act. The Commons Journal refers to the “Chairmen’s Panel”, and the Statutes Revised follows this. In either case the reference must be to the panel provided for in Commons SO No. 85, whose proper title was the “Chairmen’s Panel” and is now the Panel of Chairs. The practice is to nominate one member from each of the two main parties.

3. For example, provision for dispute resolution did not prevent the certification of the bill that became the Age-Related Payments Act 2004 (see section 5 of the Act).

4. See the exchange with Mr Hope at HC Deb (1911) 24, cols 375-6.

5. Second Report 1976/77 (HL 256).

1.13 However, the inclusion of provisions about administration might result in a bill not being certified as a money bill.

1.14 Erskine May⁶ notes that the Tax Credits Bill in the 2001-02 session was not certified on the basis that, although it established two new tax credits, it also made changes to the administration of child benefit and guardian's allowance.

1.15 Bills will be certified if they are otherwise within the definition even though their objects are not purely fiscal, or indeed not fiscal at all. This applies whether the ulterior object is to be gathered from the government's explanation of the bill, as in the case of the Selective Employment Payments Bill 1966, or whether it appears on the face of the bill, as with various anti-dumping and similar duties (for example, those provided for in the Safeguarding of Industries Bill 1921 or the Abnormal Importations (Customs Duties) Bill 1932).

“Imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on the Consolidated Fund, the National Loans Fund or on money provided by Parliament, or the variation or repeal of any such charges”

1.16 The qualifying words - “for the payment of debt or other financial purposes” - mean that a distinction must be drawn between bills which impose a charge for a financial purpose and bills which impose a charge for another purpose. It is usual for that other purpose to be characterised as either a social or economic purpose.

1.17 Where a charge is imposed both for a financial purpose and for another purpose, it is necessary to identify which is the primary purpose. Erskine May states that “even if the main object of a bill is to create a new charge on the Consolidated Fund or on money provided by Parliament, the bill will not be certified if it is apparent that the primary purpose of the new charge is not purely financial”.⁷ The examples cited of bills not certified for that reason are the Family Allowances Bill (from the 1944-45 session) and the Reinsurance (Acts of Terrorism) Bill (from the 1992-93 session).

1.18 In identifying whether or not the primary purpose is financial, it may be necessary to look beyond the text or form of the bill to ascertain the underlying policy aims.

1.19 That said, a bill which makes provision for a simple grant scheme, whatever its underlying purpose, is likely to be certified as a money bill. An example is the bill for the Childcare Payments Act 2014.

1.20 It must not be assumed that a bill that amends or repeals an Act that was a non-money bill is itself a non-money bill. It must be considered whether the purpose of the variation or repeal of a charge is financial. A bill that contains only provision for the amendment or repeal for a financial purpose of a charge that was not itself imposed for a financial purpose is likely to be certified as a money bill.

1.21 See, for example, the bill for the Savings Accounts and Health in Pregnancy Grant Act 2010 which was certified as a money bill. This bill removed eligibility for a child trust fund and entitlement to health in pregnancy grant (in substance, repeals of charges on money provided by Parliament) and repealed the whole of the Saving Gateway Accounts Act 2009 (which, as well as providing for payments by HMRC, created the administrative apparatus for those accounts). Neither the bill for the Child Trust Funds Act 2004 nor the bill for the Saving Gateway Accounts Act 2009 were certified as money bills; entitlement to health in pregnancy grant was conferred as a result of textual amendments made by the Health and Social Care Act 2008 (not a money bill). But the repeals were considered to be for a financial purpose because they were for the purpose of cutting public expenditure and reducing the budget deficit.

6. p797, FN 51.

1.22 Authorising expenditure is a financial purpose. Therefore, pure “Baldwin Agreement bills” are typically certified as money bills if they are confined to authorising expenditure. Examples are the Rolls-Royce (Purchase) Bill 1971, the Job Release Bill 1977 and the High Speed Rail (Preparation) Bill 2013. Baldwin Agreement bills are bills necessary only in consequence of the agreement in 1932-4 between the Public Accounts Committee and the Treasury that significant items of government expenditure running for more than one financial year should be authorised by a specific Act and not merely by the Appropriation Act each year.

1.23 Northern Ireland The Disability (Grants) Act 1993 extends to Northern Ireland and provides in section 1(4)(c) of the Act for the reference in section 1(3) of the Act to money provided by Parliament (in the context of grants made under the section being payable out of such money) to be construed in relation to Northern Ireland as a reference to money appropriated by Measure of the Northern Ireland Assembly. This did not prevent the bill being certified as a money bill. In the context, the provision about Northern Ireland dealt with an incidental subordinate matter (see paragraph 1.10).

“Supply; appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money”

1.24 The Supply and Appropriation Bills (previously the Consolidated Fund Bills and Appropriation Bills) are covered by these limbs of the definition.⁸

1.25 The words “receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money” are taken from the long title of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1866. They were intended to cover, in Mr Churchill’s words:⁹

“..... all that great apparatus which has grown up under the Exchequer and Audit Acts of 1866, over which the Comptroller and Auditor General now presides, and other measures of that nature.”

(The Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1866 was substantially amended by the Government Resources and Accounts Act 2000.)

“Raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof”

1.26 The Commons privilege of exclusive control over public sector borrowing is a necessary corollary of its historical control over taxation because the two are alternative ways of financing government.¹⁰

1.27 This limb also covers loans of foreign governments guaranteed by Her Majesty’s

8. In the 2017-19 Session two Northern Ireland Budget Bills were certified as money bills. They provided for the appropriation of money out of the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund for the then current financial year; normally such a bill would be taken through the Northern Ireland Assembly. The sums referred to in the Bills were derived from sums voted out of the UK Consolidated Fund into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund by a UK Supply and Appropriation (Main Estimates) Act, together with revenue generated within Northern Ireland. Two Northern Ireland Budget (Anticipation and Adjustments) Bills were also certified in the 2017-19 Session.

10. Mr Asquith pointed this out early in the Committee debates on the 1911 Act: HC Deb (1911) 24, col 258.

Government in the United Kingdom.

1.28 It is thought that a bill which raises the limit on borrowing by a statutory corporation or other body will, even if it does nothing else, not be a money bill if the borrowing powers to which the limit applies include power to borrow from private sources. Whether this is the case will not always be apparent from the face of the bill.

1.29 It is interesting that the remission of a loan is not mentioned in this limb (section 1(2) expressly mentions the remission of taxation).

“Taxation”, “public money” and “loan” - not to count if raised locally for local purposes

1.30 It is important to remember that, for the purposes of the definition of a money bill in section 1(2), the expressions “taxation”, “public money” and “loan” do not include any taxation, money or loan raised by local authorities or bodies for local purposes even though these matters are included within the scope of Commons financial privilege.

1.31 Thus, for example, it is possible for a bill to be introduced in accordance with Commons Standing Order No. 50 (procedure upon bills whose main object is to create a charge upon the public revenue) but not to be certified as a money bill because it deals with local authority expenditure.¹¹

Tax law rewrite bills

1.32 All but one¹² of the tax law rewrite bills were certified as money bills even though they largely restated the existing law and did not effect substantive changes in the law.

Timing of Speaker’s decision

1.33 Section 1(3) requires the Speaker’s certificate to be endorsed on the bill when it is sent up to the House of Lords (and the fact that a bill has been certified is recorded in the Commons Journal). However, it does not say in terms when the Speaker is to make his decision. In practice, the decision is not taken until the bill has reached the form in which it is to be sent up to the Lords.

1.34 During the debates in 1911 it was alleged to be a defect in the bill that the Speaker was not required to make his decision earlier because of the risk of the Commons proceedings being completed in ignorance of whether the bill was to be certified. There is now a procedure for providing the opposition, in appropriate cases, with an informal indication, usually after second reading, as to whether a bill is likely to be certified as a money bill.

1.35 Erskine May¹³ records that the Speaker has declined to give his opinion on whether a proposed amendment would prevent a bill being certified. One of the precedents cited concerned an amendment to the Finance Bill 1912 which the government were prepared to accept if it did not prejudice certification. Although the Speaker declined to give any formal ruling, he did express his willingness to give any private assistance he could.¹⁴

11. See, for example, the bill for the Education (Grants and Awards) Act 1984.

12. The Taxation (International and Other Provisions) Act 2010 was not certified.

13. p 797.

14. HC Deb (1912) 41, cols 2667-8.

1.36 It follows that the chair of the committee on a bill will not express any opinion as to whether a proposed amendment will prevent certification.¹⁵

Role of Parliamentary Counsel

1.37 It is our role to advise the department on whether we think the Speaker will or will not certify a bill as a money bill. Before giving this advice, it is usual to seek the views of the House Authorities. PB&L Committee and the Whips will want to know whether or not a bill is likely to be certified as a money bill.

1.38 We need to keep our advice under review as a bill progresses through the Commons; amendments made during a bill's passage might impact on certification.

1.39 Questions about whether individual bills should, or should not, be certified as money bills do not need to be referred to First Parliamentary Counsel unless they raise important points of principle.

CHAPTER 2 MONEY BILLS: OTHER ISSUES

Introduction

2.1 This chapter looks at the requirements (other than certification as a money bill) for presenting a bill for Royal Assent under section 1 of the Parliament Act 1911.

2.2 The requirements are:

- the bill must have been passed by the Commons and sent up to the Lords at least one month before the end of the session;
- it must not have been passed by the Lords without amendment within one month after being sent to them by the Commons; and
- there must be no direction from the Commons that the bill should not be presented for Royal Assent.

Sending up at least one month before end of session

2.3 For the purposes of this requirement, “month” means calendar month (the definition of “month” in the Interpretation Act 1978 applies).

2.4 The House of Commons Library’s Briefing Paper on “The Parliament Acts” (No. 00675, 25 February 2016) notes at paragraph 2.1 that the exact interpretation of “one month” has never been tested. It suggests that the safest assumption is likely to be to treat “one month” as meaning, in practice, one calendar month and one day.

2.5 The question may arise as to which day a bill is sent up to the Lords if, when the bill is passed by the Commons, the Lords is not sitting (for example, because at that time the Lords have adjourned to the next sitting day). Lords Standing Order No. 50(1) may be relevant to this question. It provides that—

“If a Public Bill is passed by the Commons and is carried up to the Office of the Clerk of the Parliaments at a time when this House is not sitting, and if it is for the convenience of this House that copies of the Bill should be circulated before the Bill is read a First time, the Bill shall be deemed to have been brought from the Commons and the Clerk of the Parliaments shall arrange for the printing and circulation of copies of the Bill and any Explanatory Notes thereto.”

Not passed by Lords without amendment within one month after being sent

2.6 It should generally be clear whether the Lords have passed a bill without amendment, and done so within the allotted one month.

2.7 In practice, certification of a bill as a money bill tends to mean that no Lords amendments to the bill are tabled, albeit that amendments are possible.¹⁷

2.8 Erskine May¹⁸ refers to it being, in recent years, the “normal, but not invariable, practice

17. The Safeguarding of Industries Bill 1921 (certified as a money bill) was amended in the Lords. The procedure where the Lords amend a money bill was therefore the subject of a ruling by Mr Speaker Whitley on 18 August 1921 (HC Deb (1921) 146, cols 689-1693). The view then taken was that there was nothing in the 1911 Act which prevented the Commons taking into consideration Lords amendments to a money bill.

of the House of Lords ... not to go into committee on ‘Money bills’, whether or not they are also bills of aids and supplies”. The footnotes to this entry record that the Lords last went into committee on a money bill on 9 January 1995, on the European Communities (Finance) Bill. Erskine May reflects what is in the Companion to the Standing Orders and Guide to the Proceedings of the House of Lords (2017 - see para 8.48) which states that “In order to save the time of the House, supply bills and money bills are not usually committed. This is the invariable practice in the case of supply bills and the normal practice for money bills.”

2.9 The usual procedure for a money bill in the Lords is for all substantive proceedings to be taken on a single day, with the order for commitment discharged, no Report stage and a formal Third Reading. Lords Standing Order No. 46 prevents two stages on one day and so a Business of the House motion is needed to dispense with the Standing Order. In the case of the Bill for the Savings Accounts and Health in Pregnancy Grants Act 2010 the opposition tabled an amendment to the motion to the effect that the Bill should go through its stages on a timetable that allowed proper scrutiny and enabled both Houses to pass the Bill without recourse to the Parliament Act 1911. In debate, Lord McKenzie for the opposition indicated that he wanted there to be a Committee stage on the basis that, although the Commons could present the Bill for Royal Assent regardless of any amendments made by the Lords, it was not bound to ignore such amendments. The amendment to the motion was defeated on division and the motion agreed to.

2.10 Lords amendments to a money bill may be agreed to by the Commons - see, for example, the China Indemnity Bill 1925, the Unemployment Assistance (Temporary Provisions) Extension Bill 1935-6 and the Inshore Fishing Industry Bill 1946.¹⁹ In the case of the Unemployment Assistance (Temporary Provisions) Extension Bill and the Inshore Fishing Industry Bill the whole process of agreeing the amendments was completed within the allotted month. In the case of the China Indemnity Bill the Bill came back amended from the Lords within the allotted month and the amendment was printed and awaiting consideration when the month expired. It was eventually discussed and agreed after the month had expired (on 29 June 1925 having passed the Commons on 4 May of that year). There was no Commons motion directing that the Bill not be presented for Royal Assent under section 1 of the 1911 Act. However, it seems that the fact of the Commons having ordered the amendment to be printed and put down for consideration may have been treated as if it were a direction disapplying section 1.

2.11 If there is no agreement on any of the Lords amendments between the Commons and the Lords, the Commons can enact the bill under section 1 because it has not been passed by the Lords without amendment within one month after it was sent to them by the Commons.

2.12 If there is agreement on some of the Lords amendments but not all of them, Erskine May states:

“... it would not be possible for the Commons, while agreeing to certain amendments made by the Lords to a certified bill and disagreeing to others, to secure the Royal Assent to the bill under the terms of section 1 of the Act”.²⁰

2.13 Again (see paragraph 2.3) “month” means “calendar month”. Care needs to be taken in cases where the month would expire during a Lords recess. In such cases, it may be appropriate to adjust the time when the bill is sent to the Lords or it may be appropriate for the Commons to give a direction such that section 1 of the 1911 Act does not apply.

No direction from Commons that bill should not be presented for Royal Assent

2.14 There have been occasions when the Commons have directed that a bill should not be presented for Royal Assent under section 1.

2.15 This has happened where the allotted month has run out, or it has become clear that it will run out, before the bill comes back from the Lords and the Commons have wanted to avoid enacting the bill under section 1:

- (1) The Land Settlement (Scotland) Bill 1934 was sent to the Lords on 30 May. Due to an oversight, it did not receive a second reading until 4 July. It was passed without amendment on 5 July. Having received a message to that effect the Commons later on 5 July directed that section 1(1) should not apply.
- (2) The National Theatre and Museum of London Bill 1972-73 was sent up to the Lords on 14 December. By 20 December it was clear they could not reasonably be expected to pass it until after the Christmas recess. The Commons directed that section 1(1) should not apply. The bill was passed by the Lords without amendment in the second week of February.
- (3) The Parliamentary and other Pensions and Salaries Bill 1976 was sent up to the Lords on 27 July. Because of pressure of business the Lords had not dealt with it when they rose for the summer recess on 6 August. On returning from the summer recess the Commons directed that section 1(1) should not apply.
- (4) The Ministerial and other Salaries Bill 1997 passed the Commons on 23 July. Because of the summer recess, the Lords did not agree it without amendment until 27 October. On 5 November, the Commons directed that section 1(1) should not apply. The Bill received Royal Assent on 6 November (the only previous Royal Assent day since the bill left the Commons was on 31 July when the allotted month had not expired).

2.16 The practice now seems to be that, once the month has expired, the Commons direction should come before the scheduling of a Lords stage.

2.17 The bills at paragraph 2.15 are referred to in FN46 in Erskine May on page 796. That footnote also refers to the Rate Support Grants Bill 1985-86, in the context of a comment that “when the Lords passed a Money bill after the Commons had adjourned at the end of July, the bill received Royal Assent in the ordinary way in October without an order in the Commons to disapply s1(1) of the Act”. The bill was received by the Lords on 23 July 1986 and passed by the Lords, without amendment, on 31 July 1986. The Commons was then in recess and the recess did not end until 21 October 1986. So it was not until this day that a message was brought from the Lords that the Lords had agreed to the Bill without amendment. Royal Assent was signified on the same day. On this basis, there was no need for a Commons direction disapplying s1(1) of the 1911 Act because the Bill had been passed by the Lords without amendment within one month after being sent to the Lords by the Commons.

2.18 The form of the motion in the case of the Ministerial and other Salaries Bill was –

“That, in pursuance of the Parliament Act 1911, this House directs that the provisions of section 1(1) of that Act shall not apply to the Ministerial and other Salaries Bill.”

We may be asked to draft and advise on the motion.

2.19 There was some discussion in Parliament when the Parliament Bill was being debated as to whether section 1(1) requires the bill to be presented for Royal Assent immediately the month is up.²¹ The view put forward in answer by Sir Herbert Samuel was that the section imposes an obligation to present for Royal Assent but does not specify when this is to be done. The timing of the issuing of a commission for giving Royal Assent is a matter for Her Majesty's Ministers to advise on, that is to say the government fixes the date. The general rule is that when a commission is prepared all bills should be inserted which are then waiting for Royal Assent or which are likely to have passed by the time Royal Assent is to be declared.²²
