For the Capital Budget, these items are not included in the expenses that are budgeted for and taxed. We now only budget for depreciation. That depreciation will transfer to the balance sheet under "accumulated depreciation" at the end of the year, and will build up our cash to replace those assets at the end of their life. When capital purchases are made, the expense does not increase the mill rate, but does decrease the cash. These items will go directly into an asset account on the balance sheet.
