Althea Gibson Leadership Grant

Honoring Althea Gibson - Athlete, Pioneer, and Legend

Althea Gibson was the daughter of sharecroppers who was born in South Carolina, and raised in Harlem, NY. A child who lived on welfare, Gibson ran away from home frequently. Despite her troubled youth, she still managed to excel in athletics. Gibson exceeded normal expectations in golf, basketball, tennis, horsemanship, paddle tennis and tennis. Gibson even toured with the Harlem Globetrotters as a basketball player. Dr. Walter “Whirlwind” Johnson, a Lynchburg, VA physician who was a pioneer in the black tennis community was instrumental in her tennis training.

Gibson won the first of 10 consecutive national championships run by the American Tennis Association in 1947. This was the only American tennis tournament circuit that would allow Gibson to play, since the USTA did not allow people of color in any sanctioned events at that time. In 1953, she graduated from Florida A&M, an opportunity provided by tennis and basketball scholarships. She then moved to Missouri to become an athletic instructor at a local university.

In 1956 Gibson won her first Grand Slam title, the Doubles Championships at the French Open. Her partner was a Jewish Englishwoman, named Angela Buxton. The two faced mountains of discrimination and challenges while touring together: Buxton for her religion, and Gibson for her color. With this historic win, Gibson was then allowed to play in USTA events, then it was called the USLTA, and all other Grand Slams. That same year the dynamic duo won the same title at Wimbledon. In 1957 she lost in the Australian Open finals, but won the Wimbledon and US Championships in singles, officially breaking the color barrier. In fact, Gibson won the singles title in 1957 and 1958 in both countries.

In her retirement, Gibson became a singer, appeared in a few motion pictures, she wrote her autobiography and was inducted into the International Tennis Hall of Fame.

Gibson died in 2003 at the age of 76. She was honored on the Opening night of the 2007 US Open by the USTA, celebrating the 50th Anniversary of her win. She was also inducted in the Court of Champions. Gibson rose from a troubled childhood, overcame an impoverished upbringing, dedicated herself to excellence and succeeded in sport and in the classroom. She is a woman to be honored, remembered and admired. Althea Gibson: a woman who could have played the victim, but chose the positive pathway of hard work and determination to make her mark on tennis, and Americans of her era and yours.

The objectives of the Althea Gibson Leadership Grant are to:

1. Honor the memory, life, and achievements of this exceptional pioneer who paved the way for millions who followed.
2. Reward players who work to excel in leading others on and off the court.
3. Widen the net of opportunities to young minority players who aspire to excellence in competitive tennis.
4. Assure the careful nurturing of young players who may be candidates for USTA Elite Player Development Programs, and may have the ability to achieve national or international rankings.
5. Demonstrate the USTA resolve and commitment to multicultural participation in tennis.
