[Solved] Call of Duty 4 iw3sp.exe Crack: try to download the patch (in ZIP format. How to fix it?Q: Can't update from OneDrive I'm using OneDrive in my windows desktop. I can't seem to be able to update any app I have online in OneDrive. When I try to click Update, it only says "Checking for updates". I've tried connecting my computer to my OneDrive, the Internet and the both of them, but no luck. It's the Windows version of OneDrive (OneDrive for Windows, because I'm using Windows 8). A: It seems like you're describing the same problem I am with my Windows 8.1. I was able to update apps on my desktop, but not on my laptop. I found it to be working when I logged into my laptop using a different account. When I switched back to using my desktop account, I could again update apps. I haven't been able to use my laptop to complete the updates so far. I've tried searching on Google for answers, but have not been able to find anything that's specific to Windows 8.1. One suggestion was to run the apps through an uninstaller to remove the cached data. I haven't been able to find an uninstaller for OneDrive.

I've tried removing my account from OneDrive and logging back into my account, but this didn't work either. Q: How to move a UIButton inside UIScrollView? I am new to Xcode and creating a simple Application. I have added the UIScrollView with 3 UIButtons. I am able to drag the buttons and make them work as I want. But the problem is that I cannot move these buttons as they are in the center. I also need to keep the same length for all buttons. I have set the content size of the UIScrollView so that the length for every button is same and the buttons should be in the center. If I choose the center then I cannot drag the buttons as they are in the center. Any help will be appreciated. A: In your code, I think it's not necessary to call contentSizeForBounds: method. So, to solve the problem, I suggest you to modify the contentSizeForBounds: method. I have a class which creates scrolling UIView
