Hence, even if there is a reason to call them pseudonames, we can not use that reason to say the good proper names are pseudonames. Why they can't serve as proper names Any two people can agree on a name, and it will still be a proper name. However, two people can not agree on a name, and still be calling a certain domain a name. Note the difference between the two: two people can agree on a name two people can not agree on a name Wikipedia: Naming conventions A name is a label A name is arbitrary A name is not always correct A name is a coherent class of names Immediate neighbor names Name clashes in the real world Name clashes in the naming convention The concept of name clashes Information sources Oxford Dictionaries Online American Heritage Dictionary Name clashes For examples of name clashes in real life: first names surnames genders plural and singular forms year of birth though the year of birth has been replaced with year of birth in the standard, some people still do not know what the difference between year of birth and year of birth. I am using this to color the circle. I also want to change the circle position (it should be at the bottom of the button) so I tried to put it in a Button. But I cannot because it is an ImageView. How can I change the circle position while keeping the style? Thanks! A: You can use app:layout_constraintBottom_toBottomOf="parent" to give an UI element a position constraint to the parent view. I'd happily try it myself, but the trade-off is the number of sites which would get broken and the hours of testing I'd have to do :) But, is there any way you could set up some kind of a database which I could update with the changes I needed? Sort of a "live" server to test against. Thanks :) JJ> Sun, 26 Nov 2008 13:54:14 +0000 Latest... Now that I've fixed my old LiveJournal which ran completely out of space, I've started on re-running the "With out Satan's Golden Touch" tests and "The Last 11" tests, too. I've also pushed out the new "Style Check" feature, which will allow you to add your styles to a specific color. I've also made some improvements to the "You Have Been Logged out!" notification system as well. I added a "Hide" button which will hide the little notifications bar at the top of your Live Journal. Of course, the PDF version is still up on the Live Journal as of this writing. JJ> Sun, 15 Nov 2008 15:47:38 +0000 Animations are the Best! If you haven't read this topic before, I'd recommend that you read it. You'll be surprised at the little things we do to make our style check system easier for you. Tag animations are the best way to do anything involving the new style check system. In fact, many of the animations in A.I. Please are tag animations, although the animations on the "Font" topic aren

I have a column nvarchar column but with length limit of 10000. I need to add a new column which is ntext and the data in this column can be text or binary (not null or empty). For example, Table - Column "hello" in nvarchar(10000) "hallo" in nvarchar(10000) "Hello" in nvarchar(10000) "hello world" in ntext A: So you want to change the data-type of your column from NVARCHAR(10000) to NVARCHAR(MAX) by adding a new column. Here is what you can do with SQL Server Management Studio Express: go to Databases right-click on your database select "Tasks" -> "Modify Column" -> "Add Column" In the "Add Column" window, give the column the new type and name. I will call it: NTEXT_WITH_BINARY_DATA do the same for the data-type NVARCHAR(10000) to NVARCHAR(MAX) Now you should be able to fill this new column with your data. Note that you will need to check the data type of the existing column too. Notes: Adding a new column with the same data type as the original one is not possible. For the column to be converted to a text-type, it has to be NULL or EMPTY When you add a new column, it will not be converted automatically to the new data-type you specify
