CHARGERS at PATRIOTS

The Los Angeles Chargers (12-4) head to New England for the Divisional Round against the Patriots (11-5). The two teams will meet on Sunday, Jan. 13, with kickoff scheduled for 10:05 a.m. PT at Gillette Stadium. Jim Nantz, Tony Romo, Tracy Wolfson and Jay Feely have the call on CBS while Matt "Money" Smith, Daniel Jeremiah and Shannon Farren will bring the action on KFI-AM 640. Mario Solis and Jorge Villanueva will present the game in Spanish on KFVB-AM 980.

The Chargers are coming off their first playoff win since Jan. 5, 2014 after downing the Ravens in Baltimore, 23-17. Melvin Ingram tallied two sacks, a forced fumble and a fumble recovery while Adrian Phillips added an interception and a fumble recovery. Michael Badgley drilled a franchise postseason record five field goals to tally 15 of the 23 points on the day.

The Bolts are making their 11th appearance in the Divisional Round and hold a 4-6 mark in those games. The last Divisional playoff victory for the Chargers was at Indianapolis on Jan. 13, 2008, against the Colts. Billy Volek came in for an injured Philip Rivers and scored the game-winner on a 1-yard run to give the Bolts the 28-24 victory.

The Chargers and Patriots have met 41 times with New England holding a 24-15-2 all-time advantage. The Patriots won the last meeting, 21-13, in New England on Oct. 29, 2017. The two franchises have met three times in the playoffs with the Patriots holding a 2-1 advantage. The Patriots downed the Chargers 21-12 in the AFC Championship Game in 2008 and 24-21 in the Divisional Round in 2007. The Bolts won the AFL Championship on Jan. 5, 1964 by defeating the Boston Patriots, 51-10.

The Patriots enter the playoffs fresh off earning their 10th straight division title. New England is 8-0 at home in 2018 and have won eight straight playoff games in Foxborough. Offensively the Patriots rank fourth in the NFL in scoring at 27.3 ppg and fifth in yards per game (393.4). Defensively, New England ranks seventh in scoring defense and 21st in yards allowed.

THE HEAD COACHES

Anthony Lynn is in his second season as a head coach in the National Football League after serving as Buffalo's interim in Week 17 of the 2016 season. Lynn comes in with 83 games of playing experience under his belt, as well as two world championships on his résumé as a running back for the back-to-back Super Bowl champion Denver

Broncos (XXXII and XXXIII). Lynn has always had a passion for teaching the game. Immediately following his last season in 1999, Lynn assumed the role of offensive assistant and assistant to special teams in Denver in 2000. Lynn spent 12 years as a running backs coach for the Jaguars, Cowboys, Browns, Jets and Bills. He then landed his first assistant head coaching position in New York with the Jets, while also coaching the running backs, and assumed the same position the following two seasons in Buffalo. The two seasons Lynn spent in Buffalo, the Bills led the NFL in both rushing yards (2,630 in 2016, and 2,432 in 2015) and rushing touchdowns (29 in 2016, and 19, tie in 2015). During his last two coaching stops (New York and Buffalo), Lynn's offenses combined for a total 18,218 rushing yards during that span (2009-2016), the most combined yards in the NFL over that period. In his first season at the helm in Los Angeles Lynn rallied the team after an 0-4 start to win nine of the final 12 games, including six of the last seven contests. The Chargers finished 9-7 and just missed out on a playoff berth due to a tiebreaker. The nine wins over the 12-game span was the best mark since the team won the last 11 games of the 2009 season. The five-straight home wins were also the best run on home turf since that 2009 season.

Bill Belichick completed his 43rd season as an NFL coach in 2017 and is in his 19th season as head coach of the New England Patriots. Belichick is the only head coach in NFL history to win five Super Bowl titles. In 2017, Belichick won a division title for the ninth consecutive season and won an eighth conference championship as a head coach, extending his NFL record in both categories. Belichick won 13 regular season games for an NFL-record seventh time and secured his 15th AFC East Division title as Patriots head coach, the most in NFL history. Belichick entered 2018 with the most wins among all active coaches and is currently third all-time with 278 total victories as a head coach. Belichick's winning percentage of .683 ranks first in NFL history among coaches with 150 or more wins. He has led the Patriots to a winning record for 17 consecutive seasons (2001-17), trailing only Tom Landry, who recorded 20 consecutive winning seasons from 1966-85. Belichick has also notched 28 postseason wins in his career, most by a head coach in NFL history. Belichick, who was hired by Patriots Chairman and CEO Robert Kraft on Jan. 27, 2000, is in his 19th season with the Patriots. In 18 seasons, Belichick has so far delivered five Super Bowl championships, eight conference titles, 15 division crowns and 27 playoff victories. The Patriots have won 10 consecutive division championships, besting the seven won by the L.A. Rams (1973-79). Belichick directed the Patriots to victories in Super Bowls XXXVI (2001), XXXVIII (2003), XXXIX (2004), XLIX (2014) and LI (2016).

Los Angeles allowed 229 yards of offense, the fewest allowed in a postseason game in Chargers history. The defense allowed 139 yards passing, good for the fourth-best single-game mark in team postseason annals.

The Bolts defense allowed just 69 total net yards in the first half, the fewest allowed in the first half of a postseason game in team history and the fewest allowed in an opening half of a playoff game since Indianapolis allowed 16 yards against Kansas City in the AFC Wild Card of the 2006 postseason.

With seven sacks on the day, the Chargers defense tied a team mark for the most single-game sacks in the postseason since the 1992 postseason (seven in a 17-0 victory in AFC Wild Card vs. Kansas City).

PLAYER NOTES

DE Melvin Ingram III punched the ball free for a fumble on Baltimore's second offensive drive for his first career postseason forced fumble. The ball was recovered by S Adrian Phillips to give the offense starting field position at the Ravens 15-yard line, setting up a field goal by K Michael Badgley.

Ingram posted another sack in the fourth quarter, giving him the most sacks by a Chargers defender in a postseason game since DE Raylee Johnson had two sacks in Super Bowl XXIX against San Francisco. He finished with seven total tackles, two sacks, a forced fumble and a fumble recovery, becoming the sixth player in NFL postseason history to have two sacks, a forced fumble and a recovery in a game, and the first since Kony Ealy did so in Super Bowl 50.

Phillips picked off a pass that was deflected by CB Casey Hayward Jr. in the second quarter, becoming the first Charger in postseason history with an interception and a fumble recovery in the same game. It was the first time that any player did so in the postseason since Atlanta CB Robert Alford in Super Bowl LI against New England.

With a made 53-yard attempt late in the first quarter, Badgley recorded the second-longest field goal in team postseason annals. He finished the game with five made field goals and 15 points, setting a team record for the most single-game makes and points scored in Chargers postseason history. Badgley's 15 points brought him past Kaeding (five points in 2004 AFC Wild Card vs. New York Jets) for the most points by a Chargers rookie kicker in a single postseason game.

TE Antonio Gates posted 26 yards on three catches, bringing him to 490 career postseason receiving yards to pass Russ Francis (474) and Jason Witten (486) for the 10th-most by a tight end in NFL postseason history. Gates also reached 46 career postseason catches, passing Witten for No. 8 among tight ends in postseason annals.

In the first quarter, DE Joey Bosa recorded the first postseason sack of his career with a six-yard takedown to force a Baltimore punt. CB Desmond King II returned the ensuing punt 33 yards, good for the longest postseason punt return in team annals.

King returned the opening kickoff of the second half 72 yards, good for the second-longest in Chargers postseason history to only trail a 98-yarder for a touchdown by WR Andre Coleman in Super Bowl XXIX against San Francisco.

On the first defensive possession of the second half, DT Justin Jones and Ingram had back-to-back sacks, both the first of their postseason careers.

LB Uchenna Nwosu had a strip-sack to seal the game in the fourth quarter, giving him and Jones gave him the most postseason sacks by a Chargers rookie in history, passing LB Shaun Phillips (0.5 sacks in 2004 postseason).

RB Melvin Gordon III returned from a knee injury to punch in a one-yard rushing score in the fourth quarter for the game's first touchdown.

WHAT THE CHARGERS RETURN

The Chargers bring back a roster that made a combined 256 starts for the Bolts last year. Eight of those players (S Jahleel Addae, DE Joey Bosa, RB Melvin Gordon III, CB Casey Hayward Jr., DE Melvin Ingram III, NT Brandon Mebane and QB Philip Rivers) started all 16 contests for the Chargers last season. Rivers' 16 starts last year increased his mark to 192-straight starts in the regular season, the NFL's longest active streak.

The Bolts return 1,492 yards and 10 touchdowns in production from the ground game from 2017, including 1,105 yards and eight scores from Gordon. The 1,492 yards represents 93.5 percent of the team's 2017 production.

Through the air, the Chargers return 85.5 percent of the team's 2017 production, bringing back 3,889 receiving yards. 1,393 of those yards rested in the hands of consensus Comeback Player of the Year Keenan Allen. Of 28 total touchdown catches from last year, the Bolts bring back 24 of those scores with six coming courtesy of No. 13.

The Chargers return 36 sacks of the squad's 43 from last year. Even more impressively, the Bolts return 12 of the team's 18 interceptions, including one returned by CB Desmond King for a 90-yard pick-six at Dallas on Thanksgiving.

CHARGERS IN THE LAST 12 GAMES OF 2017

The Chargers finished the 2017 season in impressive fashion, winning nine of their last 12 games. The offense flourished over that span from Week 5 on. The Bolts ranked fourth in total offense, passing and first downs in the NFL. The Chargers outscored their opponents 283-179 over that span, threw for 3,444 yards and 22 TDs to only seven INTs and rushed for 1,325 yards and seven scores. Defensively, Los Angeles ranked third in points per game allowed with 14.9 over those weeks and paced the NFL with 17 interceptions.

HEAD COACH ANTHONY LYNN

On Jan. 13, 2017, the Los Angeles Chargers named Anthony Lynn the 16th head coach in franchise history and the first African-American head coach in team annals. Lynn joined the Chargers after spending the 2015-16 seasons as the assistant head coach and running backs coach for the Buffalo Bills.

In his first season at the helm in Los Angeles Lynn rallied the team after an 0-4 start to win nine of the final 12 games, including six of the last seven contests. The Chargers finished 9-7 and just missed out on a playoff berth due to a tiebreaker. The nine wins over the 12-game span was the best mark since the team won the last 11 games of the 2009 season. The five-straight home wins were also the best run on home turf since that 2009 season.

Lynn put his imprint on the team in year one. The Bolts turned the ball over just 15 times in 2017 to rank tied for fourth in the NFL after a season in which they were dead last with 35 turnovers. The offensive line led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed with 18. The Chargers haven't led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed since in the AFL in 1968.

A native of Celina, Texas, some 40 miles north of Dallas, Lynn was an All-Southwest Conference running back as a collegian at Texas Tech, where he rushed for 1,911 yards and 17 touchdowns on 481 carries. That helped him earn a ticket to the NFL where he signed with the New York Giants as an undrafted free agent in 1992. After being released by the Giants, Lynn signed with Denver in 1993 and appeared in 13 games for the Broncos. In 1994, he suffered a broken leg and spent the year on injured reserve. Lynn moved on to the Bay Area in 1995, spending two seasons with the San Francisco 49ers (1995-96) before concluding his career in Denver (1997-99) where he won back-to-back Super Bowl championships (XXXII and XXXIII) with the Broncos. Lynn hung up his cleats after the '99 season, having played in 83 career games.

Lynn jumped right into the coaching ranks in 2000, spending three seasons (2000-02) with the Broncos as an offensive assistant and assistant to special teams. In 2003, he landed his first full-time position gig as the running backs coach for the Jacksonville Jaguars (2003-04). That was followed by similar positions with the Dallas Cowboys (2005-06), Cleveland Browns (2007-08), New York Jets (2009-14) and Bills (2015-16). Lynn carried the additional title of assistant head coach in New York in 2014 and with the Bills for his two seasons there.

Lynn spent the last two seasons (2015-16) with the Bills, including the final 14 games of the 2016 season as their offensive coordinator and the final game of the year as their interim head coach. The Bills led the NFL in both of Lynn's seasons in both rushing yards (2,630 in 2016 and 2,432 in 2015) and rushing touchdowns (29 in 2016 and 19, tie in 2015). The Bills also led the League in average yards per carry (5.3 in 2016 and 4.8, tie in 2015) in each of his two seasons in Upstate New York. More impressively, at his last two coaching stops (New York and Buffalo), his teams combined to rush for 18,218 yards during that span (2009-16), the most combined yards in the NFL over that time period. In Week 16 of the 2016 season, as Offensive Coordinator for the Bills, Lynn led the offense to a franchise-record 589 total yards.

The fact that Lynn is coaching today is a miracle in and of itself. Back in 2005, early in Lynn's first season with the Cowboys, he was hit by a drunk driver while crossing a street. The impact was so violent that it's a miracle he survived. The accident happened as Lynn was leaving a restaurant following dinner with several Cowboys coaches. The impact threw him an estimated 40-50 feet and he landed on top of a parked Volkswagen. The force of the impact totaled the car. Pittsburgh Steelers Offensive Coordinator Todd Haley was with Lynn at the time. He narrowly avoided being hit himself and was the first to render aid to Lynn. The damage tally was extensive – two collapsed lungs, three broken ribs, major facial and shoulder damage that required four surgeries and temporary paralysis – yet despite it all, Lynn walked out of the hospital in less than two weeks.

Lynn was raised in Texas by a single mom, Betty Jackson, a former all-state basketball player who had coaching aspirations herself. Lynn's maternal grandfather, Tommy Lynn, a farmer and former baseball catcher, helped raise Anthony. Mother and grandfather helped instill a tireless work ethic in Lynn at an early age. By 13, he was working 40-60 hour weeks doing construction in the summertime. He worked his way up the construction ladder and had become a foreman by the time he was in high school. One of his responsibilities was driving his crew to job sites for a company that built shopping malls and custom homes. It spurned an interest in interior design and Lynn initially studied interior fashion design in college.

Lynn has since reconnected with his father, Donald Wilson, a Los Angeles native who once tried out for the Dodgers as a left-handed pitcher. Wilson now resides in Corona.

Lynn is married to Stacey Bell Lynn. He has two children, son, D'Anton, and daughter, Danielle. Stacey is a news anchor at WNBC in New York City. D'Anton played football collegiately at Penn State and professionally with the New York Jets and the Canadian Football League's Hamilton Tiger-Cats and currently is the assistant defensive backs coach for the Houston Texans. Danielle studied at the University of Oklahoma and is currently in graduate school at the University of North Texas.

In the spring of 2018, Lynn completed his college degree after leaving school for the NFL 26 years ago. Despite being in his first year as a head coach, Lynn received his degree in interdisciplinary studies from UNLV.

GENERAL MANAGER TOM TELESKO

With a keen eye for acquiring talented players, Tom Telesco serves his sixth season as General Manager of the Chargers in 2018.

Telesco was hired by the Chargers in January 2013. Forty years old at the time of his hiring, he became the youngest general manager in team history. Telesco immediately helped the Chargers return to the playoffs in 2013 with a roster that featured 25 players who joined the team prior to or during the season.

His first draft featured 2013 Pepsi Next NFL Rookie of the Year Keenan Allen. In 2017, Allen went on to break the Chargers' single-season receptions record and posted the second most receiving yards in team history en route to being named the NFL Comeback Player of the Year and earning his first Pro Bowl nod.

Over his five years with the organization, Telesco has drafted three pro bowlers in the first round in Jason Verrett, Melvin Gordon and Joey Bosa.

Telesco also has a proven track record with undrafted free agents. His finds have been highlighted by deep-threat and 1,000-yard receiver Tyrell Williams out of Western Oregon, special teams stalwart Nick Dzubnar from Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, running back Austin Ekeler out of Western State and Central Michigan safety Jahleel Addae.

On top of his draft choices, Telesco has brought in some of the top free agent talents in the NFL. Casey Hayward has blossomed into one of the top corners in the league, making back-to-back Pro Bowls in 2016-17 while offensive tackle Russell Okung made the Pro Bowl in his first season with the team in 2017. His signings also include defensive tackle Brandon Mebane, wide receiver/punt returner Travis Benjamin and his latest being three-time Pro Bowl center Mike Pouncey in 2018.

A native of Buffalo, N.Y., Telesco prepped at St. Francis High School in Athol Springs, N.Y. Days prior to Super Bowl XLVIII in January 2014, which was co-hosted by New York and New Jersey, Telesco was recognized for his accomplishments on the floor of the New York State Senate by Senator Timothy Kennedy.

After graduating from St. Francis, Telesco played wide receiver at John Carroll University in Ohio. He was a starter on the Blue Streaks' 1994 Ohio Athletic Conference Championship team, and two of his teammates at John Carroll were Chris and Brian Polian, sons of Bill Polian, a 2015 inductee into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

While attending John Carroll, Telesco spent four summers (1991-94) as a training camp intern with the Buffalo Bills. At that time, the elder Polian was the Bills' general manager. Polian left Buffalo for Carolina in 1994 and after Telesco graduated from John Carroll with a degree in business management in 1995, Polian hired him to work in the Panthers' scouting department. In 1998, Telesco and Polian moved on to Indianapolis, where Telesco would spend his next 15 NFL seasons as a college scout, pro scout, director of pro scouting, director of player personnel and vice president of football operations. He worked in Indianapolis during Peyton Manning's entire career with the Colts and later part of the team that brought Andrew Luck to the Colts with the first pick of the 2012 NFL Draft. Telesco also was involved in Colts drafts that featured four-time Pro Bowl running back Edgerrin James, five-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Reggie Wayne, Dwight Freeney, a seven-time Pro Bowler as a Colt and two-time Pro Bowl selection and Defensive Player of the Year Bob Sanders.

Telesco's tenure in Indianapolis was one of the most successful eras in Colts history. They played in two Super Bowls, including a victory over Chicago in Super Bowl XLI. From 1998-2012, the Colts won 154 regular-season games, eight division titles and they appeared in the playoffs 12 times. Indianapolis set an NFL record with 12 or more wins in seven consecutive seasons and they won an NFL-record 23 straight regular-season games during the 2008-09 seasons. Their 115 regular-season wins from 2000-09 set an NFL record for wins in a decade.

In 2015 and this year in 2018, Telesco was invited to be a speaker at the NFL's Career Development Symposium in Arizona. The program, attended by nearly 70 coaches and front office executives, was designed to engage aspiring head coach and general manager candidates. Telesco was one of only two active general managers invited to address participants at the symposium. He is also the co-chairman of the NFL General Manager Advisory Committee.

Telesco and his wife, Larah, have a daughter, Elena, and two sons, Thomas and Nicholas.

WEEK 1 RECAP - CHIEFS 38, CHARGERS 28

The Los Angeles Chargers dropped their season opener to the Kansas City Chiefs 38-28 Sunday from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center.

Running backs Melvin Gordon and Austin Ekeler combined for 292 total yards and a touchdown, but it wasn't enough to make up for the explosiveness of wide receiver Tyreek Hill and the rest of the Chiefs' high-powered offense. Kansas City has now won its last nine games over the Chargers.

After a three-and-out by the Chargers offense to begin the game, Hill returned a punt 91 yards for a touchdown to make the score 7-0 after a Harrison Butker extra point.

Los Angeles responded with an eight-play, 48-yard drive that ended with Caleb Sturgis converting a 45-yard field goal - his first with the Chargers. Kansas City led 7-3, but Hill wasn't done adding to the visitors' lead.

On the fifth play of the Chiefs' next possession, quarterback Patrick Mahomes found Hill over the middle for a 58-yard touchdown - 46 of those yards came after the catch. Hill touched the ball three times in the first quarter, scored two touchdowns and gained 179 all-purpose yards. Kansas City led 14-6 after the first quarter.

The Chargers found their rhythm on offense early in the second quarter. Gordon and Ekeler combined for 75 total yards on a 12-play, 96-yard drive that was capped off by a 13-yard Ekeler touchdown reception from Philip Rivers. A failed two-point conversion cut Kansas City's lead to 14-12.

The Chiefs added a 46-yard Butker field goal to extend their advantage to 17-12 at halftime.

Kansas City opened the second half with an 11-play, 75-yard touchdown drive. A one-yard reception from Mahomes to wide receiver De'Anthony Thomas made the score 24-12 after another Butker extra point. Mahomes would later hit fullback Anthony Sherman for a 36-yard touchdown, giving the Chiefs a 31-12 advantage after three quarters.

Rivers found wide receiver Keenan Allen for a 20-yard touchdown reception to open the fourth quarter, cutting Kansas City's lead to 31-20 after Antonio Gates caught the two-point conversion.

Rivers finished the game 34-of-51 for 424 yards, three touchdowns and an interception. Allen caught eight balls for 108 yards and a touchdown. Gordon finished with 166 total yards and added a two-point conversion. Ekeler had 126 total yards and a receiving touchdown.

WEEK 2 RECAP - CHARGERS 31, BILLS 20

The Los Angeles Chargers beat the Buffalo Bills 31-20 on Sunday at New Era Field for their first win of the 2018 season.

Running back Melvin Gordon scored three touchdowns – all in the first half – while Philip Rivers spread the ball to six different receivers and finished an efficient 23-of-27 for 256 yards and three touchdowns. The Chargers' defense was credited with five sacks. They hit rookie quarterback Josh Allen eight times and picked him off twice.

A pair of Chargers defensive rookies set the early tone for a dominant first half. On Buffalo's first possession, Allen – while trying to avoid a blitzing Derwin James – was sacked by linebacker Uchenna Nwosu. James added a tackle for loss later in the first quarter.

Both defensive plays were key in setting up the Chargers' first two scores of the day. Wide receiver Mike Williams caught his first career touchdown – a 10-yard pass from Rivers – to give L.A. a 7-0 lead. It capped a three-play, 38-yard drive which also included a 25-yard reception by tight end Virgil Green.

On the Bolts' next offensive possession, Gordon finished a six-play, 61-yard drive with a 20-yard touchdown run. Los Angeles led 14-0 after the first quarter – and Gordon wasn't done.

After a Buffalo field goal, the Chargers marched down the field again courtesy of two Austin Ekeler rushes (22 and 16 yards) and a 23-yard reception by Green. This time, Gordon scored on a nine-yard reception from Rivers.

The hat trick for No. 28 came on a two-yard touchdown reception from Rivers with two minutes remaining in the second quarter. Los Angeles led 28-6 at halftime. Gordon finished the game with 66 total yards.

Ekeler rushed for a career-high 77 yards on 11 carries. Defensive end Melvin Ingram notched 1.5 sacks and three quarterback hits. James had six total tackles – two for loss – and a sack. Safety Adrian Phillips and rookie linebacker Kyzir White added two second-half interceptions of Allen.

Dating back to last season, Los Angeles has outscored Buffalo 85-44 in two meetings.

WEEK 3 RECAP - RAMS 35, CHARGERS 23

The Rams defeated the Chargers 35-23 Sunday at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum. Wide receiver Mike Williams caught two touchdown passes from Philip Rivers and running back Melvin Gordon added a score, but it wasn't enough to overcome 33 first downs and 521 yards of total offense by the Rams.

The Chargers defense prevented Rams points on the opening possession of the game when cornerback Desmond King recovered a Todd Gurley fumble -- forced by defensive tackle Brandon Mebane -- at the Bolts' 24-yard line. The Chargers offense went three-and-out, though, and the Rams didn't make the same mistake on their next possession.

Gurley capped off an 11-play, 80-yard drive with a one-yard touchdown run. The Rams led 7-0, but only for 92 seconds.

Gordon opened the Chargers' next possession with a 20-yard rush that included an acrobatic leap over Rams safety Lamarcus Joyner. Two plays later, Rivers found Williams, who beat cornerback Marcus Peters for a 42-yard touchdown reception. Caleb Sturgis missed the extra point, which made the score 7-6.

The Rams closed the first quarter with a three-yard touchdown pass from Jared Goff to Robert Woods. It was all part of a seven-play, 75-yard drive that put the Rams up 14-6.

With the Rams threatening to score again, rookie safety Derwin James picked off Goff in the end zone for his first career interception. The Chargers offense took over at their own one-yard line, but quickly went three-and-out. On fourth down, Drew Kaser's punt was blocked by linebacker Cory Littleton and recovered by Blake Countess in the end zone for a Rams touchdown. A Sam Ficken extra point increased the lead to 21-6.

Down two scores, the Chargers then drove down the field in ten plays. Gordon's 11-yard touchdown rush -- aided by a key block by fullback Derek Watt -- cut the Rams' lead to 21-13. That score would stay true after Ficken missed a 46-yard field goal to close the first half. A Keenan Allen fumble on the opening drive of the second half set the Rams offense up at their own 45-yard line. Three plays later, Goff found wide receiver Cooper Kupp for a 53-yard touchdown reception.

Williams' big day continued on the Bolts' next possession. On a crucial 4th-and-2, Rivers found the second-year receiver for a 20-yard touchdown strike. The Chargers shaved the lead to 28-20, but stopping the Rams explosive offense proved to be too much.

Woods caught 10 of his 11 targets for 92 yards. His second touchdown -- a six-yard reception in the third quarter -- put the Rams up two scores.

Rivers finished the game 18-of-30 for 226 yards and two touchdowns. Gordon rushed for 80 yards on 15 carries.

WEEK 4 RECAP - CHARGERS 29, 49ERS 27

The Los Angeles Chargers rallied from 14 points down in the first quarter to beat the San Francisco 49ers 29-27 Sunday from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center.

Philip Rivers threw for 250 yards and three touchdowns on a day when he also passed John Elway for the eighth-most passing yards in league history. Running back Melvin Gordon racked up 159 total yards, caught seven passes and scored his fifth touchdown of the season. The game was put on ice in the fourth quarter after rookie safety Derwin James hit 49ers quarterback C.J. Beathard, causing him to make an errant throw that was intercepted by defensive end Isaac Rochell.

Los Angeles improved to 2-2 on the season and secured their first home win of 2018 despite an inauspicious start.

Less than one minute into the game, Rivers was intercepted by 49ers cornerback Antone Exum Jr., who returned the ball 32 yards for a touchdown. A Robbie Gould extra point gave San Francisco an early 7-0 lead.

The Chargers went three-and-out on their second offensive possession, and the third resulted in a 54-yard missed field goal by Caleb Sturgis. San Francisco capitalized on its field position with a six-play, 56-yard drive that ended with a two-yard touchdown pass from Beathard to wide receiver Kendrick Bourne.

Down two scores early, the Chargers offense marched 75 yards in seven plays. Rivers found tight end Antonio Gates for a five-yard touchdown, but Sturgis missed the extra point. It was 14-6 San Francisco after the first quarter. The Rivers-to-Gates touchdown was the 88th of their career.

After a 49ers field goal, Rivers threw his second touchdown in as many drives - this time connecting with running back Austin Ekeler for a 22-yard strike. Rivers then hit Gordon for the two-point conversion to tighten San Francisco's lead to 17-14.

With 30 seconds remaining in the second quarter, cornerback Desmond King returned a Bradley Pinion punt 56 yards to San Francisco's 33-yard line. Two plays later, Sturgis' 48-yard field goal tied the game 17-17 at halftime.

James' third sack of the season set the tone for the second half. San Francisco was again forced to punt to King, whose 21-yard return put the Chargers at their own 49-yard line. Six plays later, Gordon caught a six-yard touchdown pass from Rivers to put Los Angeles up 23-17 after Sturgis' second missed extra point of the day.

The 49ers - aided by a pair of roughing-the-passer penalties - were threatening to score at Los Angeles' eight-yard line until a Beathard pass bounced off the chest of Garrett Celek and into the arms of cornerback Trevor Williams. Williams returned the ball 86 yards to San Francisco's 12-yard line.

A Sturgis 25-yard field goal would increase Los Angeles' lead to 26-17 but it didn't hold for long. Later in the quarter, Beathard hooked up with tight end George Kittle for an 82-yard touchdown. It was 26-24 Chargers after the third quarter.

Both teams traded field goals in the fourth quarter before Rochell's interception sealed the win.

WEEK 5 RECAP - CHARGERS 26, RAIDERS 10

The Los Angeles Chargers beat the Oakland Raiders 26-10 on Sunday from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center for their first division win of 2018.

Running backs Melvin Gordon and Austin Ekeler combined for 179 total yards and two touchdowns. It was the tenth straight game that Gordon has had either 100 yards from scrimmage or a touchdown – or both.

Defensive end Melvin Ingram spearheaded a complete defensive performance with seven tackles (two for loss), a sack and an interception of quarterback Derek Carr with the Raiders threatening to score late in the third quarter.

Quarterback Philip Rivers finished 22-of-27 for 339 yards and two touchdowns. Keenan Allen led the team in receiving with 90 yards on eight catches. The win moved Los Angeles (3-2) to over .500 for the first time this season.

Los Angeles opened the game with a seven-play, 37-yard drive highlighted by a 16-yard Gordon rush. Kicker Caleb Sturgis was good from 49 yards out to give the Chargers an early 3-0 lead.

The Raiders tied the game at 3-3 in the second quarter with a 24-yard field goal by Matt McCrane, but that was as close as the visitors would get.

With 4:14 remaining in the second quarter, Ekeler took a short pass from Philip Rivers and raced 44 yards for Los Angeles' first touchdown on the day. Sturgis' extra point made it 10-3.

On the first play of Oakland's next possession, Chargers linebacker Jatavis Brown forced wide receiver Martavis Bryant to fumble after a 21-yard gain. Safety Jahleel Addae recovered the ball, putting Los Angeles back in business at the Raiders' 48-yard line.

Six plays later -- on a drive that included a 34-yard reception by Gordon -- No. 28 punched in a one-yard touchdown run. Los Angeles led 17-3 at halftime.

In the second half, the Chargers added a field goal and a 13-yard touchdown from Rivers to tight end Virgil Green to put the game out of reach.

WEEK 6 RECAP - CHARGERS 38, BROWNS 14

The Los Angeles Chargers beat the Cleveland Browns 38-14 Sunday at FirstEnergy Stadium for their third straight win.

Los Angeles' high-powered offense was paced by running back Melvin Gordon, who scored three touchdowns on 150 total yards, 132 of which came on the ground (7.3 yards per carry). Gordon now has nine total touchdowns on the season. As a team, the Chargers rushed for 246 yards.

Wide receiver Tyrell Williams caught three passes for 118 yards and two touchdowns from Philip Rivers in the span of less than seven minutes in the second quarter. The Chargers manufactured 449 yards of total offense.

Cleveland was overmatched on both sides of the ball. Browns quarterback Baker Mayfield went 22-of-46 for 238 yards, one touchdown and two interceptions -- both by cornerback Desmond King. Mayfield was also sacked five times.

The Browns offense stalled on the game's first series after safety Rayshawn Jenkins and defensive tackle Corey Liuget split a sack on Mayfield. Cornerback Desmond King's 32-yard punt return put Los Angeles' offense at its own 43-yard line.

In five plays, the Chargers went 57 yards for their first opening drive touchdown in 22 games. Gordon's four-yard score put Los Angeles up 7-0 after new kicker Michael Badgley made the extra point.

Mayfield was sacked three times in the first quarter -- 1.5 of them by defensive tackle Damion Square on back-to-back plays. The Browns got on the board at the start of the second quarter with a 33-yard field goal by Greg Joseph to make the score 7-3.

Williams' explosive second quarter started with a 44-yard reception from Rivers. On the next play, Williams -- surrounded by three defenders -- hauled in a 45-yard touchdown. The two-play, 89-yard drive extended Los Angeles' lead to 14-3.

With 57 seconds remaining in the half, Rivers found Williams again -- this time for a 29-yard touchdown on 3rd-and-6. Los Angeles led 21-6 at halftime.

The first of King's two interceptions came with 12:05 remaining in the third quarter. His 33-yard return put Los Angeles at the Browns' 10-yard line. On the next play, Gordon punched it in from 10 yards out to increase the lead to 28-6.

Rivers finished the game 11-of-20 for 207 yards, two touchdowns and an interception before giving way to Geno Smith. Badgley made all five of his extra points and added a 44-yard field goal in the fourth quarter.

WEEK 7 RECAP - CHARGERS 20, TITANS 19

The Chargers improved to 5-2 Sunday after beating the Tennessee Titans 20-19 at Wembley Stadium in London.

The game was decided when safety Adrian Phillips tipped Titans quarterback Marcus Mariota's pass on a two-point conversion attempt after tight end Luke Stocker scored a touchdown with 35 seconds remaining.

Quarterback Philip Rivers went 19-of-26 for 306 yards and two long touchdown passes to a pair of Williams. Tyrell Williams had 118 receiving yards for the second straight game, while Mike Williams added 55 receiving yards on his fourth touchdown of the season.

Running back Austin Ekeler had 68 total yards on 17 touches in place of Melvin Gordon, who was inactive with a hamstring injury.

Tennessee struck first on an 11-play, 55-yard drive to open the game. Ryan Succop's 28-yard field goal gave the Titans an early 3-0 lead.

It didn't take long for Los Angeles to respond, though. On the offense's first play from scrimmage, Rivers hooked up with wide receiver Tyrell Williams for a 75-yard touchdown. Michael Badgley's extra point made it 7-3 Chargers.

After a three-and-out which included a sack by defensive tackle Darius Philon, the Chargers' offense put together a 10-play drive ending in a 29-yard Badgley field goal. Los Angeles led 10-3 after the first quarter.

The Titans added another field goal and were threatening to score again before the half. With 39 seconds remaining, linebacker Denzel Perryman picked off a Melvin Ingram-deflected Mariota pass at Los Angeles' four-yard line and returned it 16 yards. The Chargers entered halftime with a 10-6 lead.

Los Angeles' quick-strike offense opened the second half with a three-play, 75-yard drive. This time, Rivers went deep to wide receiver Mike Williams for a 55-yard touchdown to make the score 17-6.

A 37-yard kick return by Darius Jennings coupled with an unnecessary roughness penalty by safety Rayshawn Jenkins set Tennessee up at the Chargers' 42-yard line on its next possession. Seven plays later, running back Derrick Henry scored from one-yard out to close the gap to 17-13.

The Chargers added another Badgley field goal -- this one from 28 yards out -- to increase their lead to 20-13. In two games, Badgley has been perfect on field goals (3-of-3) and extra points (7-of-7).

WEEK 9 RECAP - CHARGERS 25, SEAHAWKS 17

The Los Angeles Chargers beat the Seattle Seahawks 25-17 Sunday at CenturyLink Field for their fifth straight win.

In perhaps the most difficult place in the NFL to play as the opponent, the Chargers improved to 6-2 – their best start since 2006. Quarterback Philip Rivers went 13-of-26 for 228 yards and two touchdowns in his 200th consecutive start.

Running back Melvin Gordon rushed for 113 yards and a touchdown on 16 carries after missing Los Angeles' last game with a hamstring injury. Wide receiver Keenan Allen had a season-high 124 receiving yards on six receptions.

Down eight in the fourth quarter, the Seahawks had the ball at the Chargers' one-yard line with one untimed down remaining before Seattle was called for a false start. On the final play, a Russell Wilson pass to wide receiver David Moore was incomplete in the end zone.

Seattle opened the game with a 13-play, 75-yard touchdown drive that took up over eight minutes of the clock. After nine rushes in 12 plays, Wilson's 10-yard strike to wide receiver Jaron Brown gave the Seahawks an early 7-0 lead.

Los Angeles responded with a 10-play, 94-yard touchdown drive that began with a 28-yard rush by Allen. On the last play of the first quarter, Rivers found wide receiver Tyrell Williams for a 12-yard score, but kicker Caleb Sturgis missed the extra point.

Seattle led 7-6 entering the second quarter. For Williams, it was his fourth touchdown in the last three games. For the Chargers, it was their third straight game with an opening drive touchdown.

After forcing a three-and-out, Los Angeles needed just four plays to get back in the end zone. Gordon's 34-yard rushing touchdown – set up by a 54-yard Allen reception from Rivers – put the Chargers up 12-7. Their two-point conversion attempt was no good.

Later in the quarter, Rivers orchestrated the Bolts' third touchdown drive of the half. This time, he found wide receiver Mike Williams, who tightroped the sideline 30 yards for his fifth touchdown of the season.

The Chargers led 19-10 at halftime. Their final two touchdown drives of the first half took up just 1:59 of the clock combined.

In the fourth quarter, cornerback Desmond King intercepted Wilson and returned it 42 yards for a touchdown to put the Chargers up 25-10.

WEEK 10 RECAP - CHARGERS 20, RAIDERS 6

The Los Angeles Chargers improved to 7-2 Sunday after beating the Raiders 20-6 at Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum.

It was Los Angeles' sixth-straight win and capped off a 4-0 record since Week 5, which was the team's last game from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center. Running back Melvin Gordon had 165 total yards, including a 66-yard touchdown reception on the opening possession of the second half. Gordon has at least 120 total yards and a touchdown in his last five games -- all Chargers wins.

Philip Rivers finished 18-of-26 for 223 yards, two touchdowns and an interception. The defense held Oakland out of the end zone and sacked quarterback Derek Carr four times.

The Raiders executed a successful fake punt on the game's opening possession when punter Johnny Townsend raced 42 yards to Los Angeles' 21-yard line. Faced with a fourth-and-goal at the one-yard line, safety Derwin James stopped wide receiver Dwayne Harris on a jet sweep and the Chargers' took over on downs.

Los Angeles went three-and out on its only two possessions of the first quarter. A 46-yard field goal by Raiders kicker Daniel Carlson put Oakland up 3-0 after one.

With the Raiders threatening to increase their lead at the Chargers' 21-yard line, defensive end Melvin Ingram sacked Derek Carr, who fumbled. The ball was scooped up by defensive tackle Corey Liuget and he returned it 24 yards to Oakland's 40-yard line. The turnover resulted in a 27-yard Michael Badgley field goal, which tied the game 3-3.

After forcing a three-and-out on Oakland's next possession, the Chargers continued their domination in the second quarter. A nine-play, 81-yard drive ending in an 11-yard touchdown reception by wide receiver Keenan Allen put Los Angeles up 10-3 at halftime. The Chargers have outscored their opponents 89-34 in the second quarter this season.

Gordon's touchdown was the only score in the third quarter. Los Angeles went up 20-6 in the fourth quarter on a 41-yard field goal by Badgley, who set a team record for most points (24) without a missed kick through three games.

Defensive end Isaac Rochell notched 1.5 sacks. He now has 4.5 sacks in his last five games. Allen caught six balls for 57 yards and scored his first touchdown since Week 1.

WEEK 11 RECAP - BRONCOS 23, CHARGERS 22

In the first game from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center since Week 5, the Chargers fell 23-22 Sunday to the Denver Broncos.

Broncos kicker Brandon McManus made a 34-yard field goal as time expired to end the Chargers' six-game winning streak.

Running back Melvin Gordon totaled 156 yards – his sixth-straight game with at least 120 yards from scrimmage. Quarterback Philip Rivers finished 28-of-43 for 401 yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions. Rivers has thrown at least two touchdowns in every game this season. It wasn't enough, though, to overcome two turnovers and 14 penalties.

Defensive end Joey Bosa added a quarterback hit and a tackle in his 2018 debut.

After forcing a three-and-out to start the game, the Chargers' offense put together a 13-play, 49-yard drive that included a pair of third-down catches by wide receiver Keenan Allen. Michael Badgley's 46-yard field goal gave Los Angeles an early 3-0 lead.

The Bolts' defense forced another fourth down when Bosa chased down quarterback Case Keenum, causing him to throw an incomplete pass while running out of bounds. Denver held the ball for just 4:09 of the opening quarter.

Rivers connected with five different receivers for 121 yards in the first quarter, but the Chargers committed seven penalties for 50 yards. They led 6-0 after Badgley's second field goal of the day – this one from 45-yards out.

The Broncos took the lead when undrafted rookie running back Phillip Lindsay raced 41 yards for the team's first score of the day. The touchdown was aided by a fake punt that kept Denver's drive alive.

The Broncos responded with 13 unanswered points. Their first score was set up by a Von Miller interception and a 42-yard return to the Chargers' 18-yard line. A three-yard Royce Freeman touchdown cut Los Angeles' lead to 19-14.

Denver's second score of the half was set up by a 39-yard catch-and-run by rookie wide receiver Courtland Sutton. A two-yard touchdown rush by Lindsay gave the Broncos a 20-19 lead after their two-point conversion failed.

On its next possession, Los Angeles regained the lead 22-20 with an eight-play, 60-yard drive ending in a 30-yard Badgley field goal. The next score of the game would be McManus' game winner.

WEEK 12 RECAP - CHARGERS 45, CARDINALS 10

A record-setting performance by quarterback Philip Rivers propelled the Los Angeles Chargers to a 45-10 win over the Arizona Cardinals Sunday from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center.

Rivers set a single-game NFL record by completing his first 25 passes, most of which came during a stretch where the Chargers scored 45 unanswered points. He finished 28-of-29 for 259 yards and three touchdowns before giving way to Geno Smith in the fourth quarter.

Rivers has thrown multiple touchdown passes in all 11 games in 2018. Only quarterbacks Johnny Unitas, Peyton Manning and Aaron Rodgers have thrown at least two touchdown passes in their first 11 games to start a season.

Running back Melvin Gordon had 10 carries for 61 yards and two touchdowns before leaving the game in the third quarter with a knee injury. Wide receiver Mike Williams scored two touchdowns and Keenan Allen caught seven balls for 72 yards and a touchdown - his third consecutive game with a score.

The offensive explosion was complemented by a dominating defensive performance. Defensive end Joey Bosa notched his first two sacks of the season and safety Derwin James nabbed his second interception of the year. Arizona was held to just 149 yards of total offense.

The Chargers improved to 8-3 on the season and finished 3-1 against the NFC West. They've outscored their opponents 124-41 in the second quarter this season.

Arizona struck first on its opening possession. A nine-play, 76-yard drive ended with a 25-yard touchdown pass from rookie quarterback Josh Rosen to future Hall of Fame wide receiver Larry Fitzgerald.

After a Chargers three-and-out, Arizona got the ball back at Los Angeles' 44-yard line thanks to a 26-yard punt return by rookie wide receiver Christian Kirk. Eight plays later, Phil Dawson kicked a 30-yard field goal to increase the Cardinals lead to 10-0.

Los Angeles, in need of an early spark, got it right away in the form of a 40-yard Desmond King kick return. Rivers finished the eight-play drive with a nine-yard touchdown pass to Williams to cut Arizona's lead to 10-7.

L.A.'s next two scores would come from its all-everything running back. Gordon had touchdown rushes of 26 and five yards - the latter set up by James' interception of Rosen. A Williams two-yard touchdown reception capped a 28-point second quarter for Los Angeles.

WEEK 13 RECAP - CHARGERS 33, STEELERS 30

The Los Angeles Chargers scored 26 second-half points to shock the Pittsburgh Steelers 33-30 Sunday night at Heinz Field.

Kicker Michael Badgley kicked a game-winning, 29-yard field goal with no time remaining. The Chargers are now 9-3 and have won eight of their last nine games.

Philip Rivers went 26-of-36 for 299 yards and two touchdowns. Wide receiver Keenan Allen caught 14 passes for 148 yards and a touchdown, but contributions came from up and down the roster.

After trailing 23-7 at halftime, rookie running back Justin Jackson had 82 total yards and a touchdown, all in the second half. With a knack for the big play, cornerback Desmond King scored a second-half touchdown on a 73-yard punt return.

The Chargers opened the game with a promising drive that included three catches from Allen for 42 yards. On a fourth-and-one from Pittsburgh's 34-yard line, Badgley attempted a 52-yard field goal that was no good.

Starting at its own 42-yard line, Pittsburgh needed just four plays to get on the board. A 46-yard reception by Antonio Brown set up a one-yard touchdown rush by James Conner to give the Steelers an early 7-0 lead.

Los Angeles went three-and-out on its next possession, which set the Steelers up at the Chargers' 48-yard line. A six-play drive ended the same way their first did: a one-yard touchdown rush by Conner. A missed extra point made the score 13-0 Pittsburgh after one quarter.

Needing points in a hurry, Rivers went deep and found wide receiver Travis Benjamin, who raced down the right sideline for a 46-yard touchdown reception. For Benjamin, it was his first touchdown since Week 17 of last season. Pittsburgh led 13-7 after one quarter.

With Pittsburgh threatening to score on its third straight possession, Chargers rookie safety Derwin James picked off Ben Roethlisberger at Los Angeles' eight-yard line. It was James' third interception of the season, and second in as many games. His 36-yard return was negated by an illegal block penalty, though, and Los Angeles was eventually forced to punt.

The Chargers used a 13-play, 88-yard drive in the third quarter to cut into Pittsburgh's lead. In what in real time looked to be a Rivers interception in the end zone by Steelers cornerback Joe Haden turned into Haden colliding with teammate safety Sean Davis. The ball bounced off Haden and into the arms of Allen for a nine-yard touchdown. Rivers found Gates for the two-point conversion, which made the score 23-15.

A holding penalty coupled with a Joey Bosa sack of Roethlisberger forced Pittsburgh to punt on its next possession, which led to King's game-tying punt return touchdown.

Los Angeles forced the Steelers into another three-and-out on their next possession. With an opportunity to take the lead, the Bolts leaned on their rookie ball carrier. Jackson had an 18-yard rush, a 19-yard reception and a go-ahead 18-yard rushing touchdown that made the score 30-23 Los Angeles.

WEEK 14 RECAP - CHARGERS 26, BENGALS 21

The Los Angeles Chargers beat the Cincinnati Bengals 26-21 on Sunday from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center to secure the franchise's first double-digit-win season since 2009.

With 1:50 remaining in the game, the Bengals attempted a game-tying, two-point conversion after a one-yard touchdown rush by running back Joe Mixon. Defensive tackle Darius Philon sacked quarterback Jeff Driskel to keep the Chargers ahead for good.

The difference in the five-point win, though, was the foot of Michael Badgley. The rookie kicker made four field goals including a 59-yarder, the longest in franchise history. Running back Austin Ekeler had 94 total yards and a touchdown while wide receiver Keenan Allen hauled in five catches for 78 yards and a score – his fifth in as many games.

Quarterback Philip Rivers finished the game 19-of-29 for 220 yards and a touchdown. Defensive end Joey Bosa made six tackles and notched a sack – his fourth of the season. Rookie safety Derwin James had seven tackles.

Los Angeles opened the game with a six-play, 75-yard touchdown drive that included a mix of everything – including a five-yard run by Rivers. After rushes of 15 and 18 yards by Ekeler – and a 19-yard catch by wide receiver Mike Williams – Rivers found Allen for a 14-yard touchdown reception to give Los Angeles an early 7-0 lead.

The Chargers answered a 47-yard Bengals field goal by kicker Randy Bullock with another touchdown. A 13-play, 85-yard L.A. drive ended with a five-yard touchdown rush by Ekeler to put Los Angeles up 14-3 with 14:51 remaining in the half.

Cincinnati's next two scoring drives would start in Chargers territory. On the first, Driskel came up inches short on a touchdown rush. On fourth-and-goal from inside the one, the Bengals committed a false start penalty and had to settle for a 23-yard Bullock field goal, which cut the Chargers lead to 14-6.

The Bengals' next score was a touchdown. Driskel connected with wide receiver John Ross for a six-yard score, but Cincinnati failed to convert the two-point conversion.

With 10 seconds remaining in the half, the Chargers used a pair of 11-yard receptions and a five-yard offside penalty to set up Badgley's 59-yard field goal attempt, which was good. Los Angeles led 17-12 at halftime.

The only scores for Los Angeles in the second half were three Badgley field goals (31, 32 and 45 yards).

WEEK 16 RECAP - RAVENS 22, CHARGERS 10

The Baltimore Ravens defeated the Los Angeles Chargers 22-10 on Saturday night from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center.

Los Angeles' offense was held to 198 total yards and under 20 points for the first time this season. Quarterback Philip Rivers finished 23-of-37 for 181 and two interceptions. Running back Melvin Gordon had 41 rushing yards on 12 carries and a touchdown after a three-game absence.

Down 16-10 with 2:54 remaining, Rivers found tight end Antonio Gates for an 11-yard gain, but he fumbled. The ball was scooped up by cornerback Tavon Young, who raced 62 yards for a touchdown that put the game out of reach.

On the first play of the game, Ravens cornerback Brandon Carr intercepted Rivers on a ball intended for wide receiver Mike Williams. Baltimore immediately capitalized with a 43-yard rush by rookie running back Gus Edwards, which set up a 24-yard field goal by Justin Tucker.

Baltimore had 81 rushing yards in the first quarter (7.4 yards per carry) with momentum entering the second. Threatening to score on a fourth-and-goal from the Chargers' two-yard line, Ravens quarterback Lamar Jackson threw an incomplete pass in the end zone to wide receiver Michael Crabtree.

Los Angeles had four offensive possessions after Rivers' interception on the game's opening play. Three ended in punts; the final was a nine-play, 65-yard drive ending with a 38-yard Michael Badgley field goal to make the score 6-3 Baltimore at halftime. The Ravens' offense held the ball for 19:54 in the first half.

The Ravens started the second half the same way the Chargers began the first: with a turnover. A Kenneth Dixon fumble – forced by defensive tackle Darius Philon – was recovered at Baltimore's 17-yard line by defensive end Melvin Ingram. Three plays later, Gordon punched in a one-yard touchdown run that gave L.A. a 10-6 lead.

It took two plays for a Baltimore response. Jackson connected with tight end Mark Andrews for a 68-yard touchdown to retake the lead. Tucker would later add to the Ravens' advantage in the third quarter with a 56-yard field goal. The final score of the game was Young's defensive touchdown.

WEEK 17 RECAP - CHARGERS 23, BRONCOS 9

The Los Angeles Chargers used a season-high four forced turnovers to beat the Denver Broncos 23-9 in Sunday's regular season finale from Broncos Stadium at Mile High. Los Angeles finished 8-1 away from ROKiT Field at StubHub Center and 12-4 overall. The victory also clinched the franchise's sixth season with at least 12 wins.

Now, the postseason awaits. The Chargers will travel to face the Baltimore Ravens next week in the first round of the AFC Playoffs.

Philip Rivers threw two interceptions in a first quarter that featured five combined punts and zero points. The game remained scoreless with 5:44 remaining in the second quarter until Chargers linebacker Kyle Emanuel scooped up a fumble for an 18-yard touchdown.

With the Broncos threatening to score before the half, quarterback Case Keenum was intercepted by Chargers safety Jahleel Addae in the end zone. On the return, Addae attempted a backward lateral that was recovered by Denver at Los Angeles' 20-yard line. Seven plays later, Brandon McManus kicked a 28-yard field goal to make the score 7-3 Chargers at halftime.

Los Angeles increased its lead in the third quarter after another Broncos turnover.

Defensive end Joey Bosa recovered a Tim Patrick fumble – forced by Adrian Phillips – at the Broncos' 16-yard line. Four plays later, Rivers connected with wide receiver Mike Williams for a four-yard touchdown reception.

Denver cut the lead to 14-9 in the fourth quarter with a 20-yard touchdown reception by fullback Andy Janovich. The two-point conversion attempt was intercepted in the end zone by cornerback Casey Hayward and returned for two Chargers points. Suddenly, what could have been a three-point game flipped to seven.

Austin Ekeler's one-yard touchdown rush with 5:48 remaining in the game sealed the win for Los Angeles. Ekeler led the Chargers with 58 rushing yards on eight carries.

Rivers finished the game 14-of-24 for 176 yards, a touchdown and two interceptions before giving way to Geno Smith in the fourth quarter. Mike Williams and Keenan Allen combined for nine catches for 129 yards and a touchdown. Los Angeles committed a season-high four turnovers of their own.

Bosa notched a sack and ended the regular season with 5.5 in seven games. Phillips led the defense with 12 tackles.

WILD CARD RECAP - CHARGERS 23, RAVENS 17

Threes and D.

That's what the Los Angeles Chargers used to defeat the Baltimore Ravens 23-17 in Sunday's AFC Wild Card Round from M&T Bank Stadium.

Rookie kicker Michael Badgley converted on five field goals, while Los Angeles' defense forced two turnovers, sacked quarterback Lamar Jackson seven times and held Baltimore to 229 yards of total offense -- the fewest allowed in postseason team history. Badgley set a single-game postseason team record for made field goals and points.

Down 23-3, the Ravens scored 14 unanswered points in the fourth quarter with an opportunity to win the game down six. With 28 seconds remaining, linebacker Uchenna Nwosu sacked Jackson, who fumbled. Defensive end Melvin Ingram recovered the ball to end the game.

The Chargers won time of possession 33:40 to 26:20. Quarterback Philip Rivers finished the game 22-of-32 for 160 yards while spreading the ball to nine different receivers. Running back Melvin Gordon rushed for 40 yards and a touchdown on 17 carries.

Chargers Defensive Coordinator Gus Bradley featured seven defensive backs on the field for much of the game. In the first quarter, Ingram forced a Jackson fumble, which was recovered by safety Adrian Phillips. The turnover set up a 21-yard Badgley field goal that gave Los Angeles an early 3-0 lead.

Later in the quarter, the rookie kicker converted from 53 yards out to increase the Chargers' lead to 6-0. Badgley added his third field goal in the second quarter, a 40-yarder off a Phillips interception of Jackson. His fourth was a 34-yarder as time expired in the second quarter to put Los Angeles up 12-0 at halftime.

In a drive that began late in the third quarter and ended in the fourth, Gordon's one-yard touchdown rush -- L.A.'s lone TD of the game -- capped a 10-play, 60-yard drive. Wide receiver Mike Williams' two-point conversion put Los Angeles up 20-3. Badgley's 47-yard field goal in the fourth quarter was L.A.'s final score of the game.

Ingram had two sacks while defensive ends Joey Bosa and Isaac Rochell, defensive tackle Justin Jones, defensive back Desmond King and Nwosu each chipped in with one apiece.

BEYOND THE BOLT

Boxing is in Gates' blood. In his hometown of Detroit, Gates has promoted boxing and regularly staged fight cards in the Detroit Metro Area. His paternal grandfather, Henry Hank, was a professional boxer in the 1950s and '60s, totaling a 62-31-4 record with 40 wins by knockout in the middleweight and light heavyweight divisions. Hank's 1962 fight against Joey Giardello was voted Fight of the Year by Ring Magazine. Gates' cousin, Tony Harrison, started his career with a 27-2-0 record and 21 wins by knockout.

Gates had not played football since his senior season at Detroit's Central High before signing with the Chargers as an undrafted rookie in 2003. He attended Michigan State with the intention to play football and basketball for the Spartans, but when then-head football coach Nick Saban wanted Gates to focus on football, the future All-Pro TE chose to play basketball at the collegiate level. After spending time at Eastern Michigan University and the College of the Sequoias, a junior college in Visalia, Calif., Gates found a home at Kent State. In his two seasons for the Golden Flashes, he led the team to a 52-15 record and back-to-back Mid-American Conference Titles before helping the team to the Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament in his senior season. Gates finished his career as the sixth-leading scorer in program history, had his No. 44 jersey retired in 2010 and was inducted into the MAC Hall of Fame in May 2017.

During the 2014 offseason, Gates missed the team's voluntary offseason program to be with his younger sister, Pamela, and the rest of his family in Detroit while she was in a coma from lupus. Pamela died in July 2014 after a three-year battle with disease. Gates was incredibly close with his sister and continued to honor her memory by wearing custom purple cleats with Pam's name and the Lupus Foundation of America's logo for the league's My Cause, My Cleats initiative against Cleveland this past season. Gates said, "This is a cause that is close to my heart, and I feel it really deserves more attention. It's a special week for all players, and I'm proud to support the Lupus Foundation of America to help increase lupus awareness and raise funds for lupus research. I've been looking forward to this game so I can pay tribute to my sister and her life."

Gates' wife, Sasha, is an R&B musician. A dedicated mother to their two children, Ayla and Aven, Sasha helps run the Dolling Foundation, which inspires women to maintain a strong sense of self by enhancing their natural beauty that was compromised by hair loss due to catastrophic illness or tragedy. She has had a successful modeling career and previously starred on the E! reality show 'WAGS'.

BEYOND THE BOLT

Gordon's parents played an instrumental role in his upbringing. His mother, Carmen, has never missed one of his games. Before enrolling at Wisconsin, she would shuttle him to and from football camps and combines as far away as Tennessee and Alabama. Carmen also stayed after him to maintain good grades as he was named to a host of all-academic teams during his college career at Wisconsin. Melvin wore No. 25 for the Badgers because it was his mother's age when he was born.

Gordon's father, Melvin Jr., also known as "Big Bo," taught his son the importance of strength and conditioning. The family had a weight room in the basement of their Kenosha home and Melvin Sr., was a regular fixture in the weight room at Bradford High School. Gordon continued his intense training regimen at Wisconsin where he once ran every step in Camp Randall Stadium while wearing a weighted vest. A former semi-pro football player, the elder Gordon used to show his son tapes of great running backs like Barry Sanders and Walter Payton.

On his off day leading up to Week 2, Gordon and some of his teammates volunteered in the Los Angeles Meal Pack on 9/11 Day, which helps feed food-insecure children, elderly and veterans. He founded his charity, Melvin Gordon's Beyond the Flash Foundation, earlier this year to combat childhood hunger. For his efforts on Sept. 11, Gordon was awarded Week 1 NFLPA Community MVP. As part of the recognition, the NFLPA donated $10,000 to his foundation.

Alex Spanos passed away at 95 – A proud Greek American, self-made billionaire and philanthropist

Alex Spanos, a Greek American self-made billionaire and a philanthropist passed away on Tuesday, at 95. He was the founder of A.G. Spanos Companies and owner of the Chargers NFL Franchise. According to the family's statement, Alex Spanos passed away peacefully surrounded by his loved ones on Tuesday morning.

Earlier this year he lost his wife of 70 years, Faye Spanos, who died in August at the age of 92. Faye and Alex Spanos leave behind 15 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

Statements were issued by former President George Bush, cabinet members and prominent political personalities of the United States, as well as the NFL teams.

Expedite
According to the Spanos Family announcement, "from humble beginnings to becoming the top apartment builder across the nation and the owner of an NFL franchise, Alex proved that dreams do come true.

Alex was the embodiment of the American dream and leaves behind a legacy of passion and hard work. Born the son of Greek immigrants in 1923, Alex's tireless work ethic and fearlessness was instilled in him when at only eight years old, he began working in his father's bakery before and after school. A tough upbringing coupled with the unshakeable belief that he could accomplish anything he set his mind to drove him to succeed and overcome countless obstacles.

In 1984, Alex fulfilled one of his lifelong goals by purchasing the San Diego Chargers. His intensely competitive nature and passion for sport made him the perfect fit to be a part of the NFL family. One of his most memorable moments was watching the Chargers beat the Pittsburgh Steelers to play in Super Bowl XXIX. He was equally passionate about the franchise's impact off the field, implementing many Chargers' community outreach programs that exist to this day. The Chargers Community Foundation – which he created and funded – still supports numerous critical causes, individuals in need and organizations supporting the community.

Aside from being a celebrated businessman and generous philanthropist, Alex's greatest joy and source of pride was his family. His beloved wife Faye, his four children, his 15 grandchildren and his 12 great-grandchildren always came first. Throughout Alex's life, Faye, his wife of nearly 70 years, was his rock and inspiration. It was Faye's unconditional love and support that gave him the strength and peace of mind to take risks and pursue his goals unfettered. Together they contributed generously to worthy causes and charities. Hospitals, universities, scholarship funds, youth programs, sports programs, churches, schools – all were recipients of their incredible generosity.

Through it all, Alex never forgot his roots and took immense pride in both his Hellenic heritage and Greek Orthodox faith. It was through that faith he learned compassion and empathy. Whenever he was called upon to help, he always delivered. Passionate about education, helping the underprivileged and enabling those with a dream to better their lives, he took pride in setting an example for others to follow.

Fiercely loyal, competitive, passionate and loving – that was Alex Spanos.

We have no words that can adequately express our sadness with his passing. We will continue to honor his legacy by dedicating ourselves to making a difference in the community and throughout our country.

As Alex would say, "Believe in yourself. There is nothing you can't do if you set your mind to it."

Funeral arrangements will be announced in the next few days."

Embodied the American Dream

Alex Spanos was born on Sept. 28, 1923, in Stockton, California. One of six children, Spanos built a billion-dollar fortune in real estate and construction. Alex G. Spanos and Fay Papafakis were married on August 22, 1948 at the St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church in Tarpon Springs, Florida. They were blessed to have four children, fifteen grandchildren. Fifty-five years later, Alex and Faye Spanos continue to place each other and their family at the center of their lives.

In 1951, with his young wife Faye and their infant child, Alex took a risk and left his father's bakery business, borrowed $800 and purchased a truck in order to sell sandwiches to migrant farm workers in the San Joaquin Valley. With Faye's assistance, Alex transformed his first business enterprise into a highly successful catering business. By 1956, the catering business had become so successful that Mr. Spanos began investing in real estate. In 1960, Alex began A.G. Spanos Construction which he turned into the top-ranked housing construction company in the United States.

Yet with all of this business and economic success, Spanos had never forgotten his roots or the integral role his family has played in his life. As a reflection of his belief in his family, A.G. Spanos Companies continues to be a family owned and operated business.

An Archon of the Ecumenical Patriarchate, former president of the Archdiocesan Council, and member of Leadership 100, Mr. Spanos had been a leading churchman for several decades. He was a founding member of the "Leadership 100" and the Faith Endowment, to which he has donated 10,000,000 dollars.

Faye and Alex Spanos have also been generous supporters of their home parish in Stockton, St. Basil Church, as well as being instrumental in establishing the Patriarch Athenagoras Orthodox Institute at the Graduate Theological Union (GTU) in Berkeley, CA, especially with the creation of the Alexander G. Spanos Chair in Orthodox Christian Studies at the GTU.

The Spanos couple's philanthropy has touched the lives of many individuals and communities. In particular Alex and Faye have had given back to those communities which have been important parts of their lives.

Alex Spanos was a graduate of the University of the Pacific, and the generous contributions of Alex and Faye have led to the building of the Faye Spanos Concert Hall and the 6,000-seat Alex G. Spanos Center on the campus of the University.

As owner of the San Diego Chargers, Mr. Spanos has created and funded numerous charitable activities and organizations for the city and citizens of San Diego. The city of Stockton, which has been their home and place of business for over fifty years has been a significant recipient of the Spanos' Christian philanthropy.

In his published autobiography, Sharing the Wealth (2002), Mr. Spanos states, "I believe I have a sacred duty to share my good fortune with my church, my community, my fellow Greek Americans and my family."

Alex Spanos, in particular, has been recognized for his commitment to community and humanity. He was the recipient of numerous honors and awards, including the Horatio Alger Award, The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Medal of Honor, the Gloria Swanson Humanitarian Award, and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith's National Distinguished Community Service Award for devotion to community and concern for others.

Throughout all their professional, civic, and entrepreneurial success, Faye and Alex have treasured their family above all else.

A proud Greek American

In 1972, he was elevated to be Archon Deputatos of the Ecumenical Patriarchate for his extraordinary support of the Greek Orthodox Church and in October 2004 he was honored with the "Athenagoras Award" of the Archons.

"I cannot tell you how proud I am for being Greek American and let the World know about it. There are not many of us, but when there is enough of us we can make sure they know who we are", said Alex Spanos at the "Athenagoras Award" ceremony.

In his highly emotional speech, Alex Spanos thanked repeatedly his wife Faye and his mother for giving him the right values.

"My mother was always telling me "kane kalo na deis kalo" (Do good so good comes your way) and that was what I was always trying to do", he said.

His initial involvement with Greece was in September 1986, when he travelled to Greece following the catastrophic earthquake in Kalamata, the birthplace of his parents. He was received with high honors from Prime Minister Andreas Papandreu and despite their deep ideological differences they built a strong friendship. As he states in his autobiography, Spanos tried unsuccessfully to convince his close friend and President of the United States Ronald Reagan to lift the travel warning against Greece.

His closed relationship with U.S. presidents extended to President George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush. In his message to the Athenagoras Award Ceremony, George W. Bush called Spanos “his friend” and “a person that makes the world a better place.”

During a fundraising event of the Greek American Community on April 1, 2004, , in the presence of George Bush, Spanos stated:

“This is without a question one of the most exciting things that is ever happened for George W. Bush, our President, to have the Greek Americans representing from all over the United States tonight. I am so proud, so proud and I know they feel the same way as they are supporting George W.”

In 2007 Alex Spanos has donated one million dollars for the victims of the Ilia fires and the following year he received an award by the President of the Hellenic Republic Karolos Papoulias.

When making his contribution to the Greek Fire Relief Fund, Alex Spanos stated, “We watched with heavy hearts the catastrophic fires and the destruction they left behind which affected thousands of people, their property and the beautiful countryside of Greece. I was greatly moved by the tragedy unfolding before my eyes and I know that every Greek American and every person was equally moved”.

In 2004 Alex Spanos was the Co-Chairman of the Greek American Republicans and helped to raise over 3.5 million dollars for the re-election of George W. Bush, who appointed him member of the U.S. official delegation to the Athens Olympics, headed by former President George H.W. Bush.

This was the year of Spanos’ biggest involvement with the Cyprus issue, on the eve of the referendum for the Anan Plan and the days that followed its rejection by the Greek Cypriots. Alex Spanos was working hard behind the scenes on the Cyprus cause. In June 2004, the President Cyprus Tassos Papadopoulos awarded Alex Spanos the Cross of Archbishop Makarios the 3rd, the highest honor of the Republic of Cyprus.

Billionaire developer Alex Spanos, who rose from humble beginnings to build a national real-estate empire, died early Tuesday morning at his Stockton home.

The death of Spanos, 95, came two months after the passing of 92-year-old Faye Spanos, his wife of 69 years. Alex Spanos suffered from dementia the past decade and recently had been in failing health, family spokeswoman Natalia Orfanos said.

Spanos, whose family owns builder A.G. Spanos Cos. and the Los Angeles Chargers football team, developed thousands of apartment units across the United States. His family, worth an estimated $2.4 billion, is the 344th richest in the United States, Forbes magazine reported this year.

Orfanos said memorial and funeral services will take place Oct. 23-24 at St. Basil Greek Orthodox Church. A celebration of Spanos’ life will be held following the Oct. 24 funeral at the Spanos Center on the University of the Pacific campus, Orfanos added. Times have not yet been set for any of the events.

Alexander Gus Spanos — “Big Alex” or “The Godfather” to his beneficiaries — was born in Stockton on Sept. 23, 1923, the son of immigrants.

“When Alex was born the doctor slapped him and Alex said, ‘Would you like to rent an apartment?’” the late comedian Bob Hope once joked about his friend.

In fact, when Spanos was born the likelihood that he would someday be a real-estate magnate would have seemed farfetched. Spanos’s first job came as a child working for his father, a baker. He was 8 years old.

“I think it’s so important for people not to forget where they came from,” Spanos said in 1984. “I love to talk about my past because it wasn’t easy.”

Spanos worked his way all the way to University of the Pacific, from which he graduated in 1948. Diploma in hand, Spanos returned after college to work again at his father’s bakery — 15 hours a day, seven days a week, and a $40 salary.

“I was safe, secure — and slowly dying,” Spanos recalled in “Sharing the Wealth,” his 2002 autobiography.

He finally split with his father in 1951, borrowing $800 to purchase a truck. Spanos’s wife, Faye, started spending 16 hours a day making sandwiches that her husband would then peddle to field hands in the Delta.

He later provided housing to the workers before entering the construction business full time. His start began with rental properties, a development business that spread nationwide. It was the beginning of an empire.

“I am a competitor,” Spanos told The Record in 1987. “I am a very strong competitor at anything I do. That’s part of any success — knowing that you’re good, knowing that you’re the best and proving so.”

Spanos’s focus on rentals grew in his later years to embrace the development of housing subdivisions.

“He certainly in the beginning was not a master plan community developer,” said Stockton developer Fritz Grupe, whose firm built Lincoln Village West, Quail Lakes and Brookside.

“He called me and said, ‘I’d like to come and see what you’re doing,’ so we went over to Brookside Country Club and had lunch and I was showing him around what we’re doing.”

In his later years, Spanos’s company turned to developing eponymous subdivisions, Spanos Park and Spanos Park West, that pushed Stockton’s boundaries northward.

Beyond his life’s work as a housing developer, Spanos became known for his philanthropy and for his conservative politics.

Conservative radio talk-show host Rush Limbaugh wrote the foreword to Spanos’s autobiography, and Spanos himself contributed millions of dollars to state and national candidates. He was a friend of former Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, and President George W. Bush used his jet in the 2004 presidential campaign. Spanos told The Record in 2005 that he was a friend of every Republican president since Gerald Ford. He also was a significant player in local politics, giving thousands of dollars to mayoral, City Council and San Joaquin County Board of Supervisors candidates.

Faye Spanos is credited with steering her husband toward the philanthropy that benefited the arts, education and medical care in Stockton.

His name is stamped across the city, from the Spanos Jet Center and Spanos Sports Center to his corporate offices in Spanos Park West.

Spanos was a major contributor to University of the Pacific and a wing of Dameron Hospital’s outpatient center was named for him.

Additionally, Spanos Elementary School in south Stockton bears the family name, and the Spanos family donated millions of dollars toward the Lincoln High School stadium and press box and baseball field house. The Spanos family also opened their home for an initial fundraiser for what is now the Lincoln Performing Arts Center.

Spanos Elementary Principal Danielle Valtierra said Tuesday, “He’s a wonderful namesake for our school — his upbringing, work ethic and dedication to our community. His family has been extremely generous and supportive of us.”

Spanos Elementary is closed this week for autumn break. Valtierra said her school will honor its late namesake once it is back in session.

At Lincoln Unified, Superintendent Kelly Dextraze said, “I am saddened to hear of Alex Spanos’ passing. The Spanos family has provided generous support to our programs for decades. ... We are proud to have their children and grandchildren among the alumni of Lincoln High School and appreciate their many philanthropic efforts throughout our community.”

Spanos also directed his generosity toward the Stockton Symphony, Conductor Peter Jaffe said Tuesday.

“They were very instrumental in the arts community,” Jaffe said. “And we just really appreciated them. He had an enormous impact on the community.”

Spanos became close friends over the years with comedian Bob Hope, who would perform with Spanos at benefit events.

“He started to teach me how to sing,” Spanos told The Record after Hope’s death in 2003. “I wasn’t a hooper or a singer. But he made a real hooper and singer out of me.”

Douglass Wilhoit Jr., CEO and executive director of the Greater Stockton Chamber of Commerce, recalled Tuesday, “The thing that stands out the most is watching (Spanos) and Bob Hope do the soft shoes. Yes, he was a businessman and a tough businessman. But there was a softer-kid side of him that I saw with that soft-shoe performance with Bob Hope.”

Dancing with Hope was light years from Spanos' humble beginnings. In 1984, Spanos told a reporter the key to his success was simple.

"The only thing that distinguished me from a million other dead-broke bakers," Spanos said, "was desire."

Chargers owner Alex Spanos lived life with passion, energy

Shaken for the second time in two months, the Los Angeles Chargers family is mourning the death of patriarch Alex Spanos, who died from undisclosed causes Tuesday morning. He was 95.

His passing comes almost two months to the day after the death of his wife, Faye, who was 92.

"Fiercely loyal, competitive, passionate and loving -- that was Alex Spanos," a statement reads on the club website. "As Alex would say, 'Believe in yourself. There is nothing you can't do if you set your mind to it.' "

His life's story embodied that belief. Spanos, who suffered from dementia late in life, was born in Stockton, California, to immigrant Greek parents. He began working in the family bakery at age 8, often rising at 4 a.m. to help prepare the day's goods before going to school. As an adult, he started a catering business which served sandwiches to agricultural workers and parlayed that into a thriving construction and real-estate company.

He purchased the Chargers on Aug. 1, 1984 from majority owner Eugene Klein and publicly stated his vision of winning the Super Bowl. But the club managed just one winning season in a non-strike year over his first 10 seasons. He turned over day-to-day control of the club to his eldest son, Dean, in 1994 -- the same year the Chargers advanced to their only Super Bowl, thanks in large part to Alex's hiring of general manager Bobby Beathard in 1990. Beathard was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame this past summer.

Spanos was known for his energy and passion. I experienced it first-hand while covering the Chargers for the San Diego Union-Tribune. Nick Canepa, one of our columnists, had written something critical of Spanos regarding the need for a new stadium, and the emotional owner did not hold back when he saw Canepa that morning in the lobby of the training facility, where media members and then coach Mike Riley were hanging out before the start of the draft.

"Asshole," he called down from the landing.

That was Alex Spanos: direct, transparent, forceful. After reporting the comment, I was summoned to the owner's office early the next morning before anyone else arrived. Spanos forcefully relayed how disappointed he was in me, largely because he was from Stockton and I had attended high school in the city. Not just any high school, but Lincoln High, which was directly across the street from his house. That regional tie meant something to him. It connected us, in his mind. It made me part of the extended family, so to speak.

I explained to him that it was my job to report his public actions, but he genuinely seemed hurt. Loyalty meant everything to him. So did family. His passion for his football team -- which was off the charts -- paled in comparison to his love for his family. Faye was his heart and the light in his eyes; the two were married for nearly 70 years after first meeting in Florida, where he was enlisted in the Air Force. She personified grace in the way he personified energy and passion.

"It was Faye's unconditional love and support that gave him the strength and peace of mind to take risks and pursue his goals unfettered," said the team statement.

Family was so important to them that they purchased the land around their home so their children could live nearby. The couple had four children (Dean, Dea Spanos Berberian, Alexis Spanos Ruhl and Michael Spanos), 15 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren. Grandsons John and A.G. are presidents of football operations and business operations, respectively, for the Chargers.

Funeral services will be announced later this week. In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent in the name of Alex Spanos to the following charities: American Legion -- Karl Ross Post #16, 2020 Plymouth Road, Stockton, CA 95204; The Stockton Scholars Endowment Fund at UOP, University of the Pacific, Attn: University Development/Stockton Scholars, Endowed Fund, 3601 Pacific Avenue, Stockton, CA 95211; The Discovery ChalleNGe Academy, 2922 Transworld Drive, Stockton, CA 95206; or YMCA of San Joaquin County, 2105 West March Lane, Suite 1, Stockton, CA 95207.

Chargers Are Ready to Claim Their Piece of the Los Angeles Sports Market

By Andy Benoit
Sports Illustrated
June 20, 2018

COSTA MESA, Calif. — The Los Angeles Chargers headquarters is located in a nondescript leased office building amidst a white-collar industrial sprawl in Costa Mesa, Calif., about 45 minutes from downtown L.A. The building is located to the left of a circular courtyard. To the right of the courtyard is a vacant building, and straight behind the courtyard is a coffeehouse.

Inside the office building, Chargers owner Dean Spanos is seated at the head of the table in a second-floor conference room. Over his shoulder is a giant rendering of the team's new stadium, which will be located in Inglewood, just shy of an hour's drive from the current office. Under construction until 2020, it's the mecca toward which this franchise is marching.

"It's incredible—look at that," Spanos says, turning to face the photo. "I mean, that's massive. It doesn't look like a football stadium, does it?"

No, and that's because, in many ways, it isn't. The nearly $5-billion venue, formally called Los Angeles Sports and Entertainment District (LASED), will include business parks and condominiums, a 6,000-seat theatre, luxury hotels and restaurants, an open-air shopping center and NFL Media's nerve center. Rams owner Stan Kroenke is spearheading the project, with the stadium itself a joint venture between the two teams—the Rams and Chargers will operate under equivalent leases, and the Chargers will receive 18.75% of the LASED non-football event revenue.

But underneath all of the hype of the new stadium and the glamour of the Los Angeles area, a hard truth remains: the Chargers are the newest team in a very crowded sports market—11 teams, to be exact. And even if the product on the field is up to snub—and it should be, as this team is a favorite to win the AFC West this year—is that enough for the Chargers to truly carve out its niche in Los Angeles? It will be a challenge, but the Chargers are up for it.

Moving to a new city before your stadium's completion is innately trying. After leaving Houston in 1997, the Oilers, waiting on their downtown Nashville venue, played home games at Liberty Bowl Stadium in Memphis. Attendance was abysmal, and when it wasn't, opposing fans were extraordinarily prevalent. The next year owner Bud Adams moved games to Vanderbilt—a site he had initially rejected. The Oilers went 8–8 both years.

The Chargers faced similar attendance struggles last season. Playing at the 27,000-seat StubHub Center in Carson, Calif., the team often found that the fans enjoying the intimate atmosphere were actually cheering for L.A.'s opponent. In Week 2 of the 2017 season, Youngbue Koo, the Chargers kicker at the time, missed a field goal at the end of regulation to lose to the visiting Dolphins, and QB Philip Rivers said that missed kick produced the loudest roar of the crowd all day. The following week, the red of the visiting Chiefs' fans glaringly contrasted with L.A.'s fans' blue.

There are different thoughts in the Chargers office as to what was behind this enemy infiltration.

"Really, when you look at it on a percentage-base, it's no different than any of the other teams," Spanos says. "This is not something that is just unique to us. I think the Rams experienced it a bunch last year. Miami experiences it with all the New England fans there. It's nothing new."

GM Tom Telesco says it's always going to be like that for teams in a destination city. "If you live in Buffalo and you're going to go to one road game this year, [the fan typically thinks] 'Hey let's go to L.A. or Miami!' At Qualcomm Stadium [in San Diego] let's say we got 10,000 visiting fans. [In a stadium that holds 70,000 people] you notice those fans, but not that much. You get those same 10,000 at StubHub, it looks a lot different."

Rivers issued similar sentiments following that early loss to Miami last season, saying, "It's always been a little bit of something you battle. We battled it down in San Diego... the weather, the climate, lends to that."

But traveling fans aren't the Chargers' only problem—finding and growing the team's own fan base remains an issue. There are around 24 million people in Southern California, including many transplants who may have brought fandom with them, and with no team in town from 1995–2015, many Angelenos have adopted one of the NFL's 30 non-LA teams as their own.

It didn't help when, before the season, Los Angeles mayor Eric Garcetti said on the Dan Patrick Show, "We're certainly happy to have the Chargers in L.A., but I think we could have been happy with just the [Rams] too." Some in the Chargers' building believe Garcetti was just trying to appease San Diego and the state's other non-L.A. markets (rumor has it that he wants to run for governor or even president one day). Spanos believes Garcetti's comments were misrepresented in the media, and he professes no ill-will.

But after those comments, mixed with opposing fan optics and the team's heartbreaking 0–4 start to the season, it's easy to see why the Chargers struggled with a loser narrative last season.

That shouldn't be the case in 2018; this team is favored to win the AFC West. Head coach Anthony Lynn even recently lamented to The MMQB's Albert Breer that someone had told him the Chargers had the second-most talented roster in the league. While maybe a tad hyperbolic, the notion is not ridiculous. Rivers is a bona fide field general, and his receiving corps is loaded, even with tight end Hunter Henry out with a torn ACL. The backfield and offensive line are improving, and the defense has what every team covets: perimeter cover corners (Casey Hayward and, if healthy, Jason Verrett) and dominant edge rushers (Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram). The interior of the D was addressed in the draft, with safety Derwin James in Round 1, linebacker Uchenna Nwosu in Round 2 and defensive tackle Justin Jones in Round 3.

Lynn was praised for leading the Chargers to nine wins after entering October under the most difficult of circumstances. Now, nine wins would be disappointing. The rough start last year "just made us a tougher football team," Lynn says. "We became more resilient. And now last year's not even in the back of our heads anymore, we're focused on this season."

The fascinating question is, Just how much success will it take for the Chargers to move the meter locally?

"Everybody loves a winner up here and we have to put that product on the field," says Spanos. "It's a challenging market. We knew it when we came here. There are 11 other teams we're competing against."

A quick look at the 11 other teams to which Spanos is referring: The MLB's Dodgers and Angels, which are both a little above .500, as of publish; the NBA's Clippers, which just missed the playoffs and the Lakers, which are rebuilding; the NHL's Ducks and Kings, which reached the Stanley Cup playoffs but were both swept in the first round; MLS's LAFC, currently third in the Western Conference, and the Galaxy, sitting eighth; USC and UCLA, which both lost their quarterbacks to the first round of the NFL draft; and of course, the Rams—the team with which the Chargers will be sharing a stadium, and their most direct competition. Also, the WNBA's Sparks currently lead the Western Conference.

Surprise winners of the NFC West in 2017, the Rams have had one of the most unique, aggressive offseasons in recent memory and are now among the early favorites to win Super Bowl 53. They're slated for five nationally televised games in 2018. And yet they too are still trying to gain a foothold in the L.A. market.

After a record-setting year-over-year decline in attendance last September, the Rams averaged 63,392 in home attendance on the season, which ranked 26th in the league, and filled a league-low two-thirds of their venue (the L.A. Coliseum). Their local TV ratings were 8.0, meaning just eight percent of L.A. televisions were tuned into their games. The Chargers got a 6.0, though it should be noted that a ratings point in Los Angeles represents 5.2 times as many people as a ratings point in San Diego.

Legitimate concerns were raised about the Rams having had the opportunity to secure much of the available L.A. fans simply by arriving to town a year earlier. Spanos says his staff spends little time thinking about the Rams, but he's rooting for their success.

"If I could line the stars up, it would be great if we—the Rams and Chargers—could play each other in the Super Bowl this year in Atlanta," he says. "For this market, for sales, it would be exciting. You know, timing could be impeccably perfect. But if we can't win the Super Bowl, I'd probably say I'd want the Rams to win because it just helps the [stadium] project. We are part of this, we have equity in this, we're an equal partner in this thing. And I think [Kroenke], if he was sitting here, would say the same thing. We wish each other good luck except when we play each other. The better I do is going to help him and vice versa."

Though it'd be unimaginable in most markets, with Los Angeles, where fans have so many options for sports, as well as for pop culture entertainment and outdoor activities, one also must wonder what the team does in the event that it makes a deep playoff run but sees little rise in local popularity. Spanos doesn't like looking away from the big picture. "Our goal every year is to win the Super Bowl ... even if we make a deep playoff run this year, it's about sustained success."

Success on the field always comes first, but Spanos is a businessman who recognized the opportunities that Los Angeles could bring to his franchise.

"No. 1 is obviously the product on the field—and I can't control that," he says. "I can try to hire the best coach, the best GM to bring in the best players but there's no guarantee on anything. But that's one part of it. The other part is really how we as an organization, our family, integrate ourselves into this community."

Spanos meets with small groups three or four times a week, building relationships piece by piece. And from July through December last year the Chargers participated in 150 community events and charitable programs, with an emphasis on causes promoting social justice. They partnered with the city's most established media outlets and hired the area's top afternoon drive sports talk radio host, Matt "Money" Smith, as their lead announcer. This year, their "Fight for L.A." slogan will incorporate a "Fight for Each Other" slogan.

On brand growth, Spanos and his staff proceed as if it comes down to 50% winning and 50% business strategy. And the most obvious move that illustrates that? Hiring Lynn as head coach. Instead of splurging for a big-name head coach to galvanize the fan base, the Chargers' brass hired one who was well-regarded within the NFL but largely unknown to fans outside the AFC East. Contrast that with the Raiders, who spent $100 million on Super Bowl winning celebrity coach Jon Gruden, perhaps partly with the hope of sustaining the Oakland fan base and, soon, igniting the Las Vegas one.

As John Spanos, President of Football Operations, explains, "At the end of the day, the driving force [behind hiring Lynn] was who will help us win games over who will help initially sell tickets." When it's pointed out that Bill Belichick was almost antithetical to a flashy hire in New England, Spanos says, "How 'bout that. He was the head coach of the Browns, got let go and was an assistant again. I don't remember him at that point being a necessarily flashy guy, so it's a good point."

John's dad has not prioritized a head coach's marketability, either.

"I think that's short-lived to go out and hire somebody flashy," Dean says. "In either 2001 or '02, I really wanted to hire Jimmy Johnson. We're pretty good friends and I tried, but he was retired and he didn't want to come back. That was the only time I really wanted to go after somebody. I believed in him and he was sort of a mentor to me so even that was more than, 'Oh there's a name out there, let me go chase him.' I knew him. But he wanted to fish down in Miami."

What hangs in the air when talking with anyone from the Chargers is the city of San Diego. Spanos, his family and employees are quick to emphasize how much the city still matters to them. The Chargers have maintained all of their existing community programs in San Diego, and they realize that many fans there are still loyal. But they also realize that many are still hurt. As one staffer put it, emotions remain "too raw" to consider marketing the team to those citizens. Quick as Chargers employees are to laud San Diego, the conversation always quickly shifts back slightly north.

The obstacles may seem insurmountable for this Los Angeles team, but it's nothing the team isn't ready to face head-first. This team's home is now Los Angeles.

"To go where we want to go it might take ten years," Spanos says. "We are the new kids on the block so, you know, we are fighting our way in one fan at a time. But whatever it is, we'll get there."

The Importance of Anthony Lynn's Rise as Chargers Head Coach

The Undeclared
December 27, 2018*

CARSON, California – Anthony Lynn could have lost confidence after being passed over for the Miami Dolphins' head-coaching job in 2016. After all, it's never easy to be rejected.

But the then-Buffalo Bills assistant remained on the grind, believing he had the coaching chops to successfully lead a team. "And when the opportunity came," Lynn told The Undeclared, "I knew I would be ready."

He certainly was.

A year later, the Los Angeles Chargers hired Lynn. It's working out spectacularly.

In only two seasons, the Chargers' forthright leader has directed an inspiring turnaround, producing consecutive winning records and the franchise's first playoff berth in five seasons. Despite a Week 16 loss to the Baltimore

Ravens on Dec. 22, the Chargers (11-4) still could clinch the AFC West title and home-field advantage throughout the AFC playoffs. For his efforts, Lynn is among the leading candidates for NFL Coach of the Year. And to hear Lynn tell it, his performance provides yet additional evidence to reinforce something much more significant than one person's individual accomplishments.

"There are a lot of other [African-American coaches] out there who would be great head coaches," Lynn said. "But it's really still all about getting someone to give you that first opportunity to show what you can do."

An important question will be revisited once the next head coach hiring cycle begins next week: Will owners give more minority assistants the chance to run their own shops? For black coaches, Lynn's ascent in Los Angeles could effect positive change.

His body of work has provided a textbook example of getting it right with the Rooney Rule, which mandates that an NFL team must interview at least one minority candidate for head coach and general manager openings. In a copycat league in which the franchises at the bottom eagerly follow those at the top, the Chargers are suddenly en vogue because of Lynn. On the other hand, even after Super Bowl victories by Tony Dungy and Mike Tomlin, the two African-American head coaches to win NFL championships, the 32-team league has never had as many as nine minority head coaches in any given season. What's more, the NFL has suffered major blows to its diversity efforts the past two seasons, with more hits likely to come amid expected firings after the regular season ends Sunday. And at this point, black assistants are no longer just satisfied with getting a foot in the door, many of them said. They want a fair shot at being considered for the best jobs that will help them stay in the game.

Lynn was part of the same rookie head-coaching class that included Vance Joseph of the Denver Broncos, whose time with that organization figures to end very soon. It also appears that New York Jets head coach Todd Bowles is on his way out. Marvin Lewis of the Cincinnati Bengals, the longest-tenured African-American head coach in NFL history, reportedly will leave his position at the end of the season. Lewis, who signed a two-year extension in January, may land in the team's front office. Although Steve Wilks of the Arizona Cardinals is only in his first season, the team is an NFL-worst 3-12 and he reportedly will be fired.

The Chargers' Anthony Lynn and Broncos' Vance Joseph became NFL head coaches in 2017.

When the 2018 season kicked off, the NFL had eight head coaches of color, matching 2011 and 2017 as the most the league has had in any season, including seven African-Americans. Currently, there are seven minority head coaches, six African-Americans among them (in October, the Cleveland Browns fired Hue Jackson).

Because of how head coaches are often picked these days, white assistants are in a much stronger position to move up than their minority counterparts.

The league is all-in on offense, which excites fans and helps drive television ratings, so owners prefer to fill top openings on that side of the ball — the side that's mostly white at the top-tier assistant positions. In fact, Eric M. Bieniemy of the Kansas City Chiefs and Byron Leftwich of the Cardinals are the game's only black offensive coordinators. Leftwich began the season as the team's quarterbacks coach and was promoted in October when former Cardinals OC Mike McCoy was let go. The overwhelming majority of the league's players are black.

Commissioner Roger Goodell has acknowledged that a bigger pool of candidates of color on offense is needed. There's also the fact that being a coordinator is an unofficial prerequisite to becoming a head coach. Again, white coordinators largely outnumber black coordinators. Rethinking their approach to hiring could help owners help their teams, Lynn said.

"For years, the criteria on how we pick head coaches in this league has blocked certain guys from getting a chance, which is just a fact," said Lynn, who's 20-11 overall. "So many times, they [owners] are only picking from guys who are associated with the quarterback, and a lot of those guys are white coaches."

"If you don't have African-American coaches in those coordinator positions, you're going to have more white coaches than black coaches [being hired as head coaches] by a landslide. What has to change is that they [owners] need to not be locked in on offense and coordinators and look more at everything a guy brings."

To his point, Lynn was a longtime running backs coach. Although he also was an offensive coordinator, Lynn said, "Nothing I did in that job changed my mind about the fact that you don't need to call plays to be a head coach."

"In terms of the skill set for being a head coach, it's a lot more important to be a leader," Lynn continued. "Sure, you hire a guy for X's and O's. Obviously, that's a big part of being a head coach. You have to be able to handle that. But you also have to be able to step into a lot of different situations sometimes and just take a hold. You have to be able to understand what needs to be done and just do it. Those are the guys who should get a chance."

A long-running complaint of many black assistants is that, under the terms of the Rooney Rule, they often feel compelled to interview for head-coaching openings they're unlikely to be hired to fill. The fact is, no professional league is more gossipy than the NFL. Even before ousted coaches clean out their desks, word spreads about who tops the lists to replace them. Black assistants often feel they're being used to satisfy the letter of the rule but not the spirit of the rule. The NFL has acknowledged that the rule needs to be strengthened and has moved to make changes it hopes will address holes in the interview process.

The impact of the rule changes will be evaluated over time. In the meantime, John Wooten, chairman of the Fritz Pollard Alliance, which helps oversee compliance of the rule, strongly believes black assistants should interview if called.

Wooten said black assistants must be on the interview circuit to be part of the head-coaching discussion. Many years ago, that's what Wooten told Lynn, who once had the opportunity to interview with the Jets when he was a highly regarded young assistant.

"He didn't want to take the interview because he didn't think he'd get the job," Wooten recalled. "I said, 'Are you kidding me? You have to know what the interview process is about. What better way can you find out what something is about than going out there and doing it?' I told him he needed to do it, and he did."

"We discussed his performance. We talked about different things he could do to help him in future interviews. It's a learning process. It's not [perfect], but you take it and let it help you get what you want."

What black assistants want most is to be hired into head-coaching positions in which they truly have the chance to succeed. There are some franchises that are so poorly run, the leaguewide perception is they will never win consistently. When openings arise, white assistants who are considered hot head-coaching candidates can be somewhat choosy. Many black assistants said they don't have that luxury because they are offered so few positions.

Lynn and Philip Rivers quickly established a strong working relationship that has produced a productive partnership.

Within the game, it's universally accepted that the presence of a top-notch quarterback on a team is the No. 1 factor in determining its future success. Lynn inherited future Hall of Famer Philip Rivers. Quickly, they established a strong working relationship that has produced a productive partnership. Upon that foundation, Lynn rebuilt the Chargers' culture. It's a sound formula for head-coaching longevity, Wooten said.

"You and I both know how important it is for a head coach to not only have that quarterback but to be on the same page with that quarterback, and what makes me so happy is that Anthony and [Rivers] are working so well together," Wooten said. "Anthony has shown he's a high-character guy, he's very intelligent, he's well-organized and he has a great football mind. And I'm not surprised by anything Anthony has done. I always knew he was capable. Just like I know there are a lot of other guys who are capable."

There's no doubt Wooten made the correct call on Lynn. Now, Wooten hopes owners will soon give him many more opportunities to prove he's right.

How Anthony Lynn molded a team -- and a case for Coach of the Year

By Dan Graziano
December 18, 2018

Anthony Lynn's Coach of the Year candidacy is enjoying a strong couple of weeks. Within the span of 11 days, his Los Angeles Chargers came back from 16 points down to beat the first-place Steelers in Pittsburgh and from 14 points down to beat the first-place Chiefs in Kansas City. They're 11-3 and locked into a playoff spot with a chance to earn the AFC's top seed if the next two weeks go well.

I caught up with Lynn by phone Friday, the day after that comeback in Kansas City, and asked him what he liked about his team. The way things are going right now, he could have said almost anything. He said this: "The way the guys feel about one another. Our locker room is very selfless. You see it on the sidelines, too. The defense believes in the offense. The offense believes in the special teams. They play for each other, so when they get into these situations, they don't flinch. That stuff starts in the offseason."

This year's Coach of the Year race is crowded. The two Seans, Payton and McVay of the Saints and Rams. Andy Reid in Kansas City. Matt Nagy in Chicago. Frank Reich, if he can lug the Colts into the playoffs. Bill O'Brien for the recovery from Houston's 0-3 start. Maybe Pete Carroll leading the not-dead-yet Seahawks?

But if the Chargers finish this off -- if they win their last two games, the Chiefs lose one more and Lynn's bunch ends up with the top seed in the AFC -- how can he not sit at the top of the list? This team played the first half of the season without top pass-rusher Joey Bosa, the whole season so far without starting tight end Hunter Henry, the past three games without starting running back Melvin Gordon, the past one without Gordon backup Austin Ekeler, and the final three quarters of the Kansas City game without top wideout Keenan Allen.

"I think he's the Coach of the Year and I don't even think it should be close," said ESPN NFL analyst Rex Ryan, who's surely a bit biased as the coach who employed Lynn as an assistant with the Jets from 2009 to '14 and the Bills in 2015 and '16. "Is he a great coach as far as X's and O's? Yeah, he is. But part of the job is to push the right buttons and to be a connector -- to connect with the fans, with the community and with your football team. And he's absolutely done that."

The most important coaching isn't the stuff you see on TV. It's just not. If you want to judge an NFL coach by watching a game and deciding whether he should or shouldn't have gone for two, or challenged a call, or called that particular timeout at that particular time, go right ahead. But you're not getting the whole picture.

The most important job an NFL coach has, by far, is getting his team prepared to play on Sundays. And you need more than one week to do that. Speaking Friday after his biggest win of the year, Lynn thought back to the offseason and the "team-building workshops" he and team psychologist Herb Martin designed for the players. These are small-group sessions, each with a different, somewhat broad topic such as "leadership" or "accountability." They ask the players to brainstorm on their topics and then get back together and discuss what they came up with. The sessions happen during the season, too -- once a month -- and Lynn does similar ones with his coaches.

"It's all over the place," Lynn said. "All geared toward developing that sense of trust and dependence on each other. They're not mandatory, but I'm really proud of how many guys show up and take it seriously. We get together in the offseason and meet, we don't talk about football. We talk about life, about finishing education, about tying your identity to something other than football. You get to the point where you can get the best out of people, you can hold people accountable. I don't think it happens organically."

The coach-hiring season is around the corner, and you're going to hear a lot about teams looking for offensive- or defensive-minded head coaches. Lynn's background is on offense -- he was a running back and a running backs coach, then very briefly an offensive coordinator that final year under Ryan in Buffalo. But more than that, Lynn is the kind of coach for whom teams should be looking next month -- one who's looking not necessarily to call plays or design innovative offensive or defensive schemes, but one who's focused on doing what he can do to build and lead a team.

"You want to get a leader, and he's got all the traits," Ryan said. "I can't take credit for him. Bill Parcells recommended him to me. But as soon as I got him, I thought, 'Man, this guy is awesome.' He's tough as hell, first of all -- he was a running back. But a guy who can get the best out of every player. Our first year with the Jets, we had Thomas Jones run for over 1,300 yards, then in the playoffs, Shonn Greene was our starter. He had both guys ready to go, no complaining. Had his guys in the right frame of mind to get the most out of them."

It's a little bit funny that the Chargers' current training facility is perfect for small-group workshoping. They operate out of an abandoned office park in Costa Mesa, California, that has been renovated to provide them with a locker room and practice fields but is still mainly a collection of cubicles, coffee shops and indoor and outdoor meeting areas. Kobe Bryant's offices are in the next building.

"Our locker room is very selfless. You see it on the sidelines, too. The defense believes in the offense. The offense believes in the special teams. They play for each other, so when they get into these situations, they don't flinch."
"- Anthony Lynn

The place is a temporary home while the Chargers, two years removed from playing in San Diego, search the sprawling Los Angeles area for a permanent residence. And that's a reminder of the unique situation in which Lynn finds himself. Last year was all about relocating and dealing with the weird circumstances of the move. This year is more settled, but they still practice at an office park, have training camp at a high school and play their home games in a 30,000-seat soccer stadium where the visiting teams' fans routinely outnumber their own.

"They play every game on the road, basically," Ryan said. "How many teams could handle that?"

So far, Lynn's team has. He took over in 2017 for Mike McCoy, who was fired after the Chargers won just nine games combined in his last two seasons. The Chargers went 9-7 in Lynn's first season and missed the playoffs on a tiebreaker that still drives him crazy. (The Bills got in even after the Chargers beat the Bills 54-24 in their head-to-head meeting.) His record as Chargers coach is 20-10. The team's nomad act may be a rallying point, but you still need the right guy to rally you.

"My college coach, Spike Dykes, used to tell me, 'Don't you ever forget: Football is a relationship business,'" Lynn said. "I've always tried very hard to remember that, and I believe in it. If you build a team like that, you have something solid you can lean on when things are going well and when they aren't."

Lynn knows these Chargers aren't home yet. They want more than a playoff spot. They'd love to shed their organizational reputation as a team that falls apart in big moments. They'd love to get Philip Rivers a Super Bowl title to finish off his Hall of Fame résumé. They have big goals, and doing things like coming back to win in Pittsburgh and Kansas City makes them believe they can accomplish them. It's one thing to design and execute an offseason team-building plan. It's another to see it come to fruition the way Lynn's has so far.

"In the offseason, I used the metaphor of a river and a flood," Lynn said. "I think about how destructive a flood can be -- just a mass of water moving on its own without any purpose. But a river is much more efficient, flowing in one direction, and it's powerful. And that's how I feel about this team right now. We're like the river. That's what we want to be."

NFL's Great Expectations 2018: 10 Teams, Coaches and Players (Plus a Broadcaster) to Watch

*By Albert Breer
May 31, 2018*

Anthony Lynn will tell you he doesn't know much about the 2018 Chargers yet. And so long as you understand that, he'll concede that he did like what he saw when he looked out his office window during the first week of the team's offseason program in mid-April.

Last year the players had to acclimate to an '80s-style series of 200-, 300- and 400-yard gassers that strength coaches John Lott and Jonathan Brooks put them through, at Lynn's direction. It was unconventional for this era, as well as raw and taxing. This year? Those same players just did them.

"The neat thing is it was so much smoother, watching the first week of offseason training, Phase I," Lynn said from that office on Wednesday. "When guys came back, they knew exactly what to expect, and exactly what to do. Last year there was a lot of explaining why. You're dealing with millennials now—they want to know why, they ask questions, they have Google; this year there was none of that. These guys, they fell in line. They knew what to expect."

Accordingly, a lot is being expected of these Chargers in 2018. The longstanding franchise quarterback is still in place, with a raft of young talent around him—and that's even after accounting for tight end Hunter Henry's torn ACL. L.A.'s second team won six of its last seven to finish the 2017 season. Two of its divisional rivals are going through transition at quarterback, and the other has a new head coach. And, as Lynn indicated, continuity is a benefit.

It's pretty different from last year, to be sure, when Lynn was new and the team was moving and the season started 0-4. So yes, the Chargers are one of those teams in '18—the kind that was pretty impressive the year before, and won't sneak up on anyone.

And they're dealing with high expectations for the first time in a while. Lots of people think the Chargers are going to be pretty good, even if Lynn doesn't quite get why. And he knows all his players must be hearing it.

"That's scary," he said, laughing. "I don't know why everybody wants to crown us all of the sudden. I had someone in here say we have the second most talented roster in the league. I mean, really? Why would you think that? I know he was being nice, but that's not even realistic, to say we have the second most talented roster when you look around the league. ... We like our team, we really do. But right now, who in the hell doesn't like their team? Everyone likes their team right now."

In this week's Game Plan, we'll explain how the players are building a war chest for a potential 2021 work stoppage, tell you why Dak Prescott is better off without Dez Bryant, detail the difficulty in doing a Le'Veon Bell deal, show you the good thing Von Miller is doing, point you to a patron saint of the scouting community and much more.

But after all the controversy of the last week, I figured we'd have some fun here and start with some football, and the Chargers, and other teams or individuals like them—living in a new world of expectations in 2018. The crosstown Rams are in that same boat, and as you might remember we talked to Sean McVay about it a couple months back. And there are others, too, dealing with a new reality.

For Lynn, handling expectations is a balancing act. On one hand, he loves what the team did at the end of the year, coming together around the program they'd worked all year to build and against the natural adversity facing a relocating team. Obviously he'd be ecstatic if that unity carried over through 2018. On the other hand, he wants his players to start from zero—which is what those gassers represented.

"I don't know if you recreate what you had last year—I think once you get that buy-in, and you can keep a nucleus of guys together, that becomes their standard, their expectation," Lynn said. "And anybody new we bring on to this team, they get them caught up quickly—this is how we do things, this is what we're about. And you just keep reemphasizing it." So in certain ways the Chargers are building just like they did last year, when Lynn was new and all the players were learning. In other ways Lynn will tell you they're ahead of where they were. "I've been really impressed with the detail and the focus, guys doing their job. The attendance has been outstanding, so you can see that. You can't see the results right now, but you can see the intent."

And then there are the expectations from the outside. No matter how incredulous the coach might be about offseason perceptions of the Chargers, they exist and they're not unjustified. The offense brings back an improved line, No. 1 receiver Keenan Allen and 1,000-yard rusher Melvin Gordon; and the defense has a chance to be really good behind edge rushers Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram, with corner Jason Verrett coming back from injury to join true No. 1 Casey Hayward in the secondary, and rookie safety Derwin James added to the mix.

The Chargers finished last year with a flourish that was indicative of their potential. So while Lynn will tout the Chiefs' addition of Sammy

Watkins ("an Olympic sprinter to go with the Olympic sprinter they already have"), the Broncos' addition of Bradley Chubb ("they already have one of the best defensive players in the league") and the Raiders' hiring of Jon Gruden ("he's gonna do a hell of a job"), he also isn't blind to what the rest of us are looking at.

But he also knows that feeding into those perceptions does no good. He recalled when he was coaching in Dallas, and the Cowboys ripped off a few wins in a row, and his old boss, Bill Parcells, responded by putting mousetraps in all the players' lockers. The idea here's the same.

"That's kind of the same message we've been giving our team: Don't take the cheese," Lynn said. "Thing is, we shouldn't even be having this conversation. These expectations, I understand we finished the season pretty strong, but we were still 9-7. We're not content or happy about being 9-7. We don't want to be that team. We want to be a lot better than that team."

And so, as Lynn continues, "The biggest expectations they're gonna hear are the ones they get right here in this building, from their coaches, from myself, from people in this organization. It's nice to get a pat on the back from your friends, your relatives, all that. But their expectations won't be any higher than ours in this building."

Cum Laude

By Anthony Lynn
Sports Illustrated

I only have three rules as a head coach, No. 1: Protect the team. No. 2: No excuses. No. 3: Be on time.

Well, for more than 20 years, I made excuses for why I couldn't go back and finish my college degree. You're not going to make the roster if you go back. You've got a kid. You're going to be a head coach. There was always something. Finally, I got fed up and just said, "I'm going to do it."

I have always wanted to finish. I was the first in my family to go to college. My mom was proud. She was expecting me to get a degree. I watched both of my children get their college degrees, and it was a little uncomfortable knowing that I hadn't finished. I felt as if I needed to be a better example.

When I got to Denver as an undrafted running back out of Texas Tech in 1993, I was six hours short of finishing my degree in exercise and sports sciences. I went to one of my Broncos coaches. He looked me in the eye and said, "Young man, if you are not here for offseason workouts, you are not going to make this team." He was coming from a good place. First-round draft picks have the leverage to go back to school and miss time, but an undrafted free agent trying out? I'd get cut. So I stayed and made the team.

After several years in the league, I figured I had enough clout to go back to school, and it was one of my peers who inspired me to finally do it. When I was an assistant coach with the Jets, our director of player development, former NFL offensive lineman Dave Szott, told me he'd completed his degree from Penn State 11 years later.

I remember sitting in his office in 2014, and his wife, Andrea, looked at me and said, "Coach, you've gotta get this done. There are no excuses."

I interviewed for seven head coaching jobs between 2015 and '17. I kept thinking, I can't go back to school this year because I'm going to be a head coach. Didn't happen. Can't go this year because I am going to be a head coach. Didn't happen. Well, I couldn't keep waiting so I just went all in during the offseason the Chargers brought me on. I was able to get really aggressive with my academics thanks to the flexibility of the program at the University of Nevada at Las Vegas.

I had wanted to finish at Texas Tech, but since I was on the West Coast, the convenient option was UNLV. I'd work all day for the Chargers, then around 8 p.m., I'd grab a sub—turkey and ham, with mayo—and go home and start studying. My wife, Stacey, was in New York City, working as a news anchor, and my kids are grown up, so I made use of the time alone. The professors and staff at UNLV bent over backward to help me. I told them, when the season starts, I need to put a lot of this on hold. They said, Do your job, and we'll work with you on deadlines.

When people say, "I really admire you for going back and getting your degree" a part of me is like, What's so admirable about a 49-year-old getting a degree? I should have been a 22-year-old getting this degree. I told my players, on the first day of our offseason program, if you need to get your school done, get it done in the offseason. I don't want you guys to be like me, 49 and going back to school.

UNLV's graduation was on May 12, the same weekend as our rookie minicamp. I wanted to move camp up a week so I wouldn't miss anything, but owner Dean Spanos and general manager Tom Telesco suggested we leave it as it was. More important than being at minicamp, they said, is explaining to the players why you are missing those days. So that's what I told our rookies: At age 49, I was going to walk across the stage at the Thomas & Mack Center in a cap and gown, and my mom would be there to see it.

Chargers' Brandon Mebane leans on faith in dealing with infant daughter's heart condition

COSTA MESA, Calif. — Brandon Mebane sat in front of his locker at the Los Angeles Chargers' training facility. Well, it sure looked like Mebane, the Chargers nose tackle and one of the team's captains.

"I'm not Brandon," the giant man said Wednesday. "Do you want me to go get him?"

The man took a half-dozen steps, then turned around.

"Just kidding," he said, and the 6-foot-1, 311-pound Mebane broke into a big smile that might have struck many people familiar with his situation as surprising.

Mebane's infant daughter, Makenna, faces life-threatening health complications stemming from a heart condition and remains hospitalized more than five weeks after her premature birth. She is expected to undergo heart surgery this spring.

Mebane missed the Chargers' past four games while spending time with his wife, Amana, and their two other children — 4-year-old daughter Mahailey and 2-year-old son Makai — in Omaha, Neb., where Makenna was born last month about four weeks ahead of her due date.

On Wednesday, Mebane, 33 and in his 12th NFL season, reiterated that plans to play against the Baltimore Ravens on Saturday and he was in good enough spirits to pull a prank on a reporter, too.

"Yeah, everything good, man," he told USA TODAY Sports through sniffles. "Just happy to be back and happy that my daughter's doing better."

During an interview with USA TODAY Sports, Mebane took out his phone, opened an app for Bible scripture and scrolled down until he found what he was looking for — 2 Corinthians 5:7.

"For we live by faith, not by sight."

Said Mebane: "That's my all-time favorite."

Growing up in Los Angeles, Mebane said, he attended a Christian megachurch, and he indicated Makenna's ordeal has both tested and strengthened his faith.

"At this point, man, when you talk to God and pray, you can't worry about the things that's happening," he said. "You got to have faith."

In July, Mebane said, his wife had a blood test that indicated their baby might have Trisomy 13 Syndrome. Only five percent to 10 percent of children with the rare chromosomal condition live past their first year, and many die within their first days or weeks of life, according to the National Institutes of Health (NIH).

Subsequent medical tests confirmed that then-unborn Makenna had the condition, according to Mebane. He and his wife went to Omaha after her research on Trisomy 13 led her to a hospital there that offered some of the top specialists.

Makenna was born Nov. 12 without complications, Mebane said.

"She was doing fine right when she came out," Mebane said, but added that that Makenna later spit up her mother's breast milk.

Soon after, Mebane said, the doctors discovered Makenna had Necrotizing Enterocolitis (NEC), a disease that affects the intestine of premature infants, according to NIH. They removed part of her intestine, according to Mebane, who said Chargers owner Dean Spanos let him use a private plan so he could get to Omaha in time for the surgery.

"Every time I see (Spanos) I tell him thanks," Mebane said. "That was special, man."

Turning subdued, Mebane said Makenna also has suffered a heart attack and that he watched as doctors worked to revive her.

"I started crying and I hadn't cried in a long time," he said. "I couldn't even remember the last time I cried."

For weeks, he flew to Omaha on Sundays after playing in the Chargers' games and rejoined his teammates on Tuesdays. Before one trip to Omaha, Mebane stopped at the home of George Gregory, the Chargers' team chaplain, and spoke to his wife on speakerphone.

"It was a very tough time for both of them because Brandon wasn't there, the baby was going through surgery and it's a lot of unknowns," Gregory said. "They were talking and I would just kind of interject and say, 'Hey, let's pray.'"

After Week 11 of the season, Mebane decided he needed to be in Omaha more than he needed to be in Southern California. Or as Chargers head coach Anthony Lynn told reporters, "his leadership is needed with his family right now."

A third-round draft pick by the Seattle Seahawks in 2007, Mebane earned a starting job as a rookie and won a Super Bowl ring in 2014 before signing with the Chargers in 2016.

Without Mebane, the Chargers still managed to win four games in a row, improve to 11-3 and clinch the team's first postseason berth since 2013. In Omaha, Mebane said, Makenna's condition stabilized.

She will be two days shy of 6 weeks old when the Chargers play the Ravens at the StubHub Center in Carson on Saturday.

"It's harder than anything I'd ever dealt with in my life," he said. "It's been a journey to where I find myself praying three, four times a day."

"You got to believe. You got to have faith that what you pray for is going to happen."

Former Ohio State quarterback Cardale Jones now deputy sheriff in Ottawa County

ELLISTON - Add deputy sheriff to the many feathers in the cap of former Ohio State quarterback Cardale Jones.

Jones is perhaps most well-known for his elite three-game stretch as a third-string quarterback thrust into the starting role at a crucial stage of the 2014 season, going on to lead the Buckeyes to the National Championship.

Far less known is that Jones also happens to be an honorary deputy of the Ottawa County Sheriff's Office.

"(Cardale) has already made an impact in Ottawa County," Sheriff Steve Levorchick said. "We've become very good friends. I love him like a brother." Levorchick swore in Jones as a deputy sheriff of Ottawa County last summer.

"Cardale will be helping us to make sure we have the bond with our young people,"

Levorchick said. "They don't want to hear from a 55-year-old sheriff, but they'll listen to Cardale."

Jones, who spoke Friday night at a banquet at Trinity United Church of Christ in Elliston, is going to be fitted for an official Ottawa County Sheriff's Office uniform.

"When he shows up in a sheriff's office uniform instead of a football uniform, they're going to realize cops aren't necessarily all bad," Levorchick said. "What a great ambassador to have for the Ottawa County Sheriff's Office."

While Jones will not be chasing down or plowing over bad guys like he did would-be tacklers in the college football playoffs, his duties as deputy entail functions like this year's Trinity United Church of Christ Men's Father-Son Banquet in Elliston, where Jones spoke as an honored special guest on Friday.

Jones, who committed to the Buckeyes as a senior at Cleveland Glenville High School in 2011, entered Ohio State as a freshman in 2012 at the same time Urban Meyer was beginning his first season as head coach in Columbus.

"It was a whole new group of coaches who didn't know how I was," Jones said. "I took a backseat role at Ohio State, going into a different situation."

Following a redshirt season, Jones was set to compete with J. T. Barrett for the backup role to then incoming starter Braxton Miller. Jones said Barrett was excelling both on and off the field and it was looking like his own chances at playing were dwindling at the time.

"I had to look in the mirror and say, 'This might not be the best thing for me,'" he said.

Jones discussed it with his family and said it was his mother, whom he cites as his biggest inspiration, who reminded him of how when he was a young boy going to Ohio State meant more to him than life itself.

Jones was 10 years old when he watched the Buckeyes win the 2002 National Championship, upsetting the then perennial power Miami Hurricanes. As his mother tells it, he decided then and there he would play for Ohio State.

Now that he was there and having doubts about his playing time, Jones' mother encouraged him to stick it out and told him all the things he did not want to hear, he said, but probably needed to hear.

Heading into the 2014 season, Miller was out for the year due to a shoulder injury in practice. Barrett moved into the starting role at QB and led the Buckeyes to an 11-1 record before falling to an injury himself in the final game of the regular season against Michigan.

As a third-string at the start of the year, Jones was now center stage heading into what was considered Ohio State's biggest, toughest game yet — the Big Ten Championship against Wisconsin.

"I finally got my opportunity and I wanted to take advantage of it," he said. Jones is often asked how he had so much confidence taking on Wisconsin's top-ranked defense and leading his team to drop 59 points on them.

"I say, 'What are they going to do, bench me?' I was the last quarterback on the roster," he said with a laugh.

Ohio State's postseason success snowballed from there. Jones said that game not only built his own confidence, but the whole team's as well.

As the No. 4 seed in the first-ever College Football Playoff, Ohio State pulled off a thrilling upset victory over No. 1 Alabama and went on to crush No. 2 Oregon to earn the National Championship.

It was the Buckeyes' first national title since 2002 — the one that sealed Jones' commitment.

"If I had to use one word to describe my career at Ohio State, I would definitely say rollercoaster," Jones said.

Dear Mom

*By Casey Hayward
The Players Tribune
October 31, 2018*

Hi, Mom.

It's me, Casey.

I'm writing you because ... well, I'm writing for a lot of reasons. Because I love you. I miss you. I just want to talk to you.

But also, I need something.

Actually, I need to know something....

I need to know how to cook cabbage. You know, the kind you made with the baked chicken and macaroni and cheese when I was a kid. Last time I made it I had the chicken down — all the little spices and everything — and the mac and cheese was ... well, it was decent.

But I couldn't get the cabbage right.

At least not like you used to.

I've been thinking a lot lately about getting back in the kitchen, the way I did when I was out on my own for the first time up in Green Bay and you had me cooking all your old recipes. I know you remember how I would call you up asking what spices to use for this, or how long to cook that, or what temperature to set the oven at so I didn't burn the house down.

I loved talking to you about cooking.

And that's why I have to say ... I'm sorry, Mom. Because since you've been gone, I haven't cooked at all. I mean, I'll microwave something for myself every now and then, or fry up some eggs for breakfast. But actually cook, like you used to? I haven't been able to. I imagine myself standing over the stove, grabbing different ingredients, trying to make it like yours, then having a question and reaching for my phone....

And having nobody to call.

I don't know ... I guess I've been avoiding it because I know it would be another reminder that you're not here, and of how much I miss you. I already have so many of those moments.

The toughest is probably right before games. You used to always call me and give me a little pep talk and say a prayer for me and my teammates.

And I gotta say ... that first game after you passed away in 2016, I didn't know how I was going to feel before the game without hearing your voice. So I decided that since you couldn't be there to talk to me, I'd talk to you. And every game since, I've recited the same prayer to you before each game:

Spread your wings and protect me

From my head to my toes

Get on my back

And let's fly

I still remember when you first told me you had breast cancer. It was my fourth year in Green Bay. You had been sick for a while but you hadn't told me or Jecavesia about it. I know you just didn't want us boys to worry about you. You never wanted anybody to worry about you. You were always the one worrying about everybody else — volunteering for events, letting somebody stay at our house if they needed to, letting people borrow five or 10 dollars whenever they needed it, even though we didn't have much money to go around.

You know, growing up in Perry, Georgia, Cavey and I didn't even know that you and Dad were struggling financially. Because you guys made sure we didn't know. You made sure we had everything we ever needed.

I remember you waking up at four o'clock in the morning to deliver newspapers. You and Dad would go out and restock the newsstands and be home in time to send us off to school. I never realized that you were doing that to earn extra money to support our family. I just thought you liked getting up early.

And between you working at the salon as a hairdresser and Dad being a manager at McDonald's, I thought we were straight. I mean, all my friends knew who Dad was because they all ate at McDonald's and they'd see him up there. Everybody knew him. He was like a little celebrity, in my eyes. And he would always bring food home for us, too. I don't know how many Happy Meals I ate in my life. Then I graduated to Quarter Pounders and Big Macs, and I would just go to town.

But it was the nights when we didn't have McDonald's that I remember most. The nights when you would cook, and we would sit around the table as a family and enjoy a meal together — you and Dad not worrying about the fact that we were struggling, and me and Cavey not even knowing ... just being kids and loving the life you guys had given us.

I don't know if I ever thanked you for that.

We had a lot of love in our house, but you were tough, too. Even today, when I make a mistake in practice or something, I can still hear you yelling at me like you did when I was a kid. Like when I was seven years old and you were in the stands at one of my basketball games and I turned the ball over. You stood up and yelled something at me, and I looked up at you and was like, "Leave me alone!"

And mom ... the look you gave me ... I don't even know how to describe it.

I just remember seeing your face and thinking, Oh, Lord, I'mma get my butt WHOOPED when I get home.

And I did.

I think that was one of maybe two times when I talked back to you like that. Like, really talked back.

The other was when I was 12 and I got so mad at you that I told you I was gonna move out.

I know you're laughing just thinking about that one.

I don't even remember what we were butting heads about — probably me cleaning up my room or doing the dishes or something. And I threw the biggest fit. I got so mad at you that I was like, "Man, I'm leaving."

You said, "Excuse me ... you're what?"

"I'm leaving! I'mma move out!"

You didn't even flinch. You were just like, "O.K. G'on, then. Leave."

You told me to pack my bag and go — but I was only allowed to take one pair of jeans, one shirt and a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. That's it.

So there I was, little 12-year-old Casey, packing my bag and walking out the front door, like I had someplace to go. Like I was gonna show you!

I was walking down the road with my backpack on, kicking dirt, still arguing with you in my head, and I didn't get but 20 minutes down the road before I realized that I didn't have no money. We lived real far from the city, too. I was never gonna make it. And even if I did, what was I gonna do when I got there?

So I turned my butt around and walked home.

And you were standing right there in the doorway.

"I knew you'd be back."

That's all you said.

Then I went inside and did whatever chore you were trying to get me to do.

Yeah, you were tough, Mom.

It was all tough love, though.

That's why it hurt me so much when I saw you wearing beanies all the time because you had lost your hair from the chemo. I'll never forget going to the barbershop one day up in Green Bay, sitting in the chair, thinking about you — because I always do — then looking at myself in the mirror and telling the barber, "Man, just cut it off."

"The whole thing?"

"Yeah, man. Straight to the scalp. Bald." Now, Mom, you know I got a big ol' head. So afterwards, I was sitting in my car looking at myself in the mirror, and I didn't even recognize myself. I looked so weird.

Then I took some photos of my giant bald head and sent them to you. Remember? I was like, "Look, Mom! I got the bald head, too!"

The very next day, you posted a photo of yourself. No hat. No beanie. Just bald as hell, and beautiful. Owning every bit of it.

I was so proud.

You fought, Mom. You fought hard. Even in the two or three weeks before you passed, you were adamant that you were gonna beat it.

But the doctors were telling us there was nothing else they could do.

It was the summer before the 2016 season. I had recently signed my contract with the Chargers, and we were all excited about my new opportunity. I had been staying at my house in Atlanta, driving an hour and 15 minutes every day to the hospital down in Macon to be with you. And for those two or three weeks before you passed, every time my phone rang, my heart sank into my stomach because I was thinking that maybe this was the one — maybe this was gonna be the call where somebody tells me that my mom is gone forever.

On July 17, 2016, that call came. It was a Sunday morning. Dad called me up and told me that you had passed.

You had done all the fighting you could do.

I drove down to the hospital, and the whole family was there. I went into your room and sat down next to you. I don't think I even said anything. I just know that I held your hand and prayed that you would watch over me and the family. That you would spread your wings and protect us.

Then I made you a promise.

I promised that I was going to dedicate the rest of my NFL career to you. That every time I stepped on the football field, I would be a reflection of you.

And you know what?

I've made the Pro Bowl each year since.

It's been two years since you passed, Mom. And I'm telling you: In that time, I've been playing the best football of my life.

Because I've been playing for you.

And even though I'd trade it all in a heartbeat to have you back, I know that you're the reason behind all my success. Because you're there, spreading your wings over me, protecting me, soaring with me every Sunday.

It's been a tough couple of years. But after everything that happened with you, if there's one thing I'm thankful for, it's that we had time with you before you passed. That the whole family had the chance to let you know how much you mean to all of us and that we love you. I'm thankful that we had that time together, because I don't know what I would have done if things had happened differently and you were taken from us suddenly, without the chance for us to say goodbye.

That's what happened with Cavey, mom. I was at a rookie dinner with a bunch of guys from the team and my cousin called me, panicking, asking if I had talked to Cavey. I tried to calm him down, but he just kept telling me to call Cavey.

A car had been involved in an accident on I-75 just outside of Macon. There were three people inside. Cavey was one of them. One person had been killed, but we didn't know who.

I left the dinner without telling anyone, and I cried the entire drive home. My phone was blowing up. When I got home, I talked to Dad.

He told me it was Cavey. He was going to the hospital to identify the body.

I flew back to Perry the next day to help dad get things in order and to be with the family. I stayed for the funeral.

That was hard, Mom. It's still hard. I can't even begin to describe it. But the toughest part was how he was just taken from us. We didn't have that time with him like we did with you. It had been a little over a year since we had lost you, and now my brother — my man — was gone, just like that.

And same as with you, I think about him all the time.

Especially when I look at his little girl, September.

That's right, mom ... you have a granddaughter.

Cavey named her September because that's the month you were born. It was his little way to pay tribute to you because he knew how much you wanted grandkids. You were always on me about it, like, "When I'mma get some grandkids, Casey?" But I wasn't ready for all that. I'm still not.

And you remember how Cavey never even wanted to have kids. He was adamant.

But I wish you could have seen how excited he was when he found out September was coming. I'm telling you, Mom, a switch just flipped in him, and it was really beautiful to see. He was so excited to be a father. He couldn't wait to meet his little girl.

I just wish he would have gotten that chance.

See, when the accident happened, Cavey's girlfriend was still pregnant with September.

He never even got to meet his own daughter.

I know he's there with you, so just let him know that I'm helping take care of September. Let him know that she looks just like her daddy. I mean just like him.

Let him know that she's beautiful.

And let him know that I miss him. I miss him texting me before every game. We had this thing we used to always say to each other: "If you ain't gettin' money, why you livin'?" It was just our little saying that meant if you're not out here to make plays — if you're not living this life to do big things and ball out — then why you livin' at all?

Getting that text from him and talking to you were the biggest parts of my pregame ritual.

Now, I call Dad before every game. We talk about how you and Cavey are shining down upon us, and then I say my prayer.

I think that's all I got for now. I'll talk to you again soon. But until then, I guess ... just let me know about the cabbage. I don't know if I'm ready to get back in the kitchen just yet, but when I do, it'd be nice to know that you're there with me. Just show me a sign. Smack me upside my head or something if you catch me using the wrong spices or cutting the cabbage wrong. I won't get mad. I just want to know you're there.

But I know you will be. You're always with me. Every time I take the field. Every time I hear your granddaughter laugh. Every time I pray. You're always here.

I am a reflection of you.

I love you, Mom. Thank you for everything. Keep watching over me and the rest of us. We still need you as much as we ever did. Maybe even more.

Spread your wings.

Protect me from my head to my toes.

Get on my back.

How the Chargers' Derwin James Is Forever Redefining the Safety Position

*By Dan Pompei
Bleacher Report
December 5, 2018*

A mural of Derwin James is painted on a wall outside Baby Blues BBQ on busy Lincoln Boulevard in Venice Beach, California. Across the street is another mural, of Ronda Rousey. Around the corner is Gold's Gym, the place Arnold Schwarzenegger made famous. About a mile-and-a-half away is Muscle Beach.

There's no mistaking this is L.A.

Painted a month or so ago, the mural is about 15 feet high, maybe 20 feet wide, and shows James in his Chargers jersey, arms folded, coming out of a ROKiT phone.

The artist responsible for the mural, Jonas Never, is a Los Angeles native who also has done murals of LeBron James, Kobe Bryant, Kirk Gibson, Fernando Valenzuela and Todd Gurley.

James, the 22-year-old rookie safety, is keeping good company.

"When the Chargers and ROKiT approached me to do this, we wanted to identify an L.A. Charger through and through, not a guy from the old San Diego team," Never says. "Derwin is having a breakout rookie campaign and he was our first thought."

Already, James belongs here. It also was clear he belonged when he stepped in front of Rams tight end Gerald Everett in the end zone and stretched to pick off Jared Goff. It was obvious he belonged when he put a move on Chiefs offensive tackle Eric Fisher to get by him and sack Patrick Mahomes from behind. And it was evident he belonged Sunday night against the Steelers when he intercepted a Ben Roethlisberger pass inside the Chargers' 10.

All of this, it seems, was meant to be.

James could have been drafted by a team that wanted him to play weak-side linebacker, free safety or strong safety. Instead, he went to a team that is playing him at all of those positions and others—the perfect fit for him. Cardinals quarterback Josh Rosen called him "a linebacker and a corner in one player." But that is a partial description.

According to James, he has played every position in the Chargers defense except middle linebacker and nose tackle. He has been at strong safety about 50 percent of the time and free safety about 40 percent of the time. The other 10 percent of the time he has split between nickel corner, outside corner, edge-rusher, defensive end, strong-side linebacker and weak-side linebacker.

The offense never knows where to find him. "If he becomes a guy where offenses are very aware of where he is on the field, then you want to keep deploying him in different spots," Chargers defensive coordinator Gus Bradley says. "At times, you'd like him as a rusher. At times, you like him in the middle third. At times, you like him in the box. So I think it's just making sure you want to have him around the ball as much as possible."

He has made plays moving forward, moving backward and moving sideways, leaping high and going low, in the backfield and downfield. He has mixed it up with 320-pound offensive tackles, slammed into thick-thighed running backs and dropped into coverage against wide receivers who move like house flies.

Being around the ball is what James enjoys most. "In the box, I feel they have to account for me in the run game, or I can blitz off the edge," says James, a leading candidate for Defensive Rookie of the Year. "When I'm at free, they don't have to deal with me as much as when I'm at strong, so at strong I feel like I'm able to impose my will more."

If there is a pile of players when the Chargers defense is on the field, chances are James is on the bottom of it. He leads the team in tackles with 81 and passes defended with 12. According to Pro Football Focus, he has 48 pass-rush snaps, four sacks, 15 pressures, two hits and nine hurries, and his pass-rush productivity grade of 21.1 is second best in the NFL among players with at least 25 rushes.

James recently started working on his pass-rush moves with Chargers defensive line coach Giff Smith, but Bradley says he came to the Chargers as a fairly well developed pass-rusher.

He also has instincts that are rare for a rookie. Bradley recalls a play against the Bills in which James flew past tight end Logan Thomas into the backfield, where Josh Allen was faking a handoff to LeSean McCoy. Instead of tackling McCoy, James bypassed the running back and went straight for Allen, tackling him for a loss of six yards.

"Nine out of 10 people would have tackled Shady in that situation," Bradley says. "But somehow, he saw it, felt it and knew it. At that moment, I went, 'Wow.'"

Prior to this year, whenever James played Madden, he created a player to be as much like him as possible. He doesn't have to do that anymore. "I'm nice on Madden," he says. "My ratings go up every week, and they got me up there pretty good. That's kind of priceless right there."

At 6'2", 215 pounds, with 33-inch arms, a 40-inch vertical and a 4.47-second 40-yard dash time, James is what Chargers safety Jahleel Addae calls a "freak of nature." Says Addae, "He can play both safeties, run, hit, play the deep ball. The way he rushes the passer, it's like he's a premier rush end."

Many have compared him to his former Florida State teammate Jalen Ramsey. Bradley, who coached Ramsey with the Jaguars, notices similarities. Both are tall, explosive, athletic and passionate about the game.

In an offseason interview, ESPN analyst Louis Riddick said the way James moves reminds him of the late Sean Taylor. Chargers backup quarterback Geno Smith says he's a cross between Kam Chancellor and Earl Thomas. James reminds Chargers tight end Virgil Green of Ed Reed.

And there is another comparison that is even more apropos to Green—The Flash. "I've seen him go from one side of the field to the other and get a pick," Green says. "It's like watching The Flash. He zooms."

Most NFL teams won't tolerate rookies who act like veterans, so early on, James mostly suppressed his urge to lead.

Throughout training camp, he kept making plays. Then, shortly before the season opener, head coach Anthony Lynn broke tradition and called a rookie to the middle of the team huddle at the conclusion of a practice.

"Derwin, break us down," he said.

"Guys, let's look at the opportunity we have, the type of team we have, and let's continue to work hard and grind every day," James said to the faces all around him.

Looking back now, James says, "That was a good day."

Ever since, James has been an accepted leader. Smith says James has become more and more vocal as he's made more and more plays.

James earned respect by practicing hard and preparing well. "A lot of times, you see a guy drafted where he was drafted, and they come in like they are God's gift to earth," Green says. "That's not him. He works his tail off every day, tries to learn the game, asks a lot of questions."

James says quarterback Philip Rivers has helped him by pointing out some of his tendencies. James, according to Addae, has tried to pay it forward by helping others, pointing out things he picks up on tape when he meets with other defensive backs.

He also isn't shy about standing up to teammates. "It's hard for a player, I don't care who you are, to call somebody else out, or to challenge somebody," Bradley says. "Not many guys can do it. He's doing it now as a rookie. That's who he is. It's not like, 'Man you're a rookie.' The respect is there. No one blinks. He has a way of saying it where people don't feel like he's attacking them. He's doing it because it's so important to him."

One member of the team says he thinks if teammates held a vote today, James would be elected a captain. James spoke his first word when he was four months old.

"Ball," he said.

"We were just laying in bed and he say, 'Ball,'" his mother, Shanita Russell, says. "It came out of nowhere. But he loved balls."

He had a collection of balls and was obsessed with them. His mom had to stop taking him on grocery runs to Publix or Winn-Dixie because he would see a display of balls and throw a tantrum to get one.

When he was learning to walk, he pulled himself up on end tables in the family's living room. And then he pushed the end tables, as if they were blocking sleds. "I was like, how could he move them?" Russell says. "He was so strong."

At the age of two, he learned to ride a bicycle without training wheels. When he was four, he became mesmerized watching his father coach older kids in flag football. "I've never seen a four-year-old so tuned into a game," his mother says.

Tony Parnell met James when they were six years old. They were on the same Pop Warner team, and they didn't lose a game for five straight years. "When I first saw him in pads, I knew," Parnell says. "He was ahead of his time, doing things you really can't teach to someone who is that young."

While his friends were playing video games, James was outside throwing around a football. "All day, every day, eat, sleep football," he says. "That's what separated me. When I wasn't playing it, I was watching football You Tube videos."

Contact came naturally. Even collisions with automobiles didn't faze him. When James was eight, he raced home on his bike to try to make his curfew after a football game went long, only to collide with a car at an intersection. He needed four staples in his head.

It was the first of two times he would be hit by that same car—the second time he cut up his knees. Another time, he drove his bike into a parked car while fleeing a friend who was trying to shoot him with a BB gun. He paid the price with a swollen knee.

James says he knew he wanted to play for Florida State when he was in first grade. When he was in eighth grade, FSU coach Jimbo Fisher called his mother to invite James to visit campus with a group of high school juniors who were being recruited. She thought it was a prank. James went, and Fisher offered him a full scholarship before he ever played a down of high school football.

When he started playing in high school, James figured he would be a quarterback and running back—the positions he primarily played in Pop Warner. If he wanted to play on offense, however, he was going to have to play on the junior varsity team.

He agreed to play safety because there was a spot for him at the position on varsity. In his first game, he had two interceptions. From then on, he would be a safety—albeit a safety who also played some quarterback, running back, wide receiver, cornerback and defensive end.

By the time he was a senior, Rivals.com rated him the best safety in the country. When James was a freshman at Florida State, he was voted Co-Defensive Newcomer of the Year by the Florida State coaches. He went on to become a two-time All-ACC player.

Football was in his blood. He's cousins with former NFL players Edgerrin James, Mike James and Karlos Williams, and current NFL player Vince Williams. Everyone knew he would follow them. The only question is who would draft him.

James grew up about an hour from Tampa. When the Bucs won the Super Bowl in 2003, John Lynch, Derrick Brooks and Warren Sapp were his guys. The Bucs had the seventh overall pick in the 2018 draft and needed a safety.

James to the Bucs seemed like a natural fit. Before the draft, the Bucs requested a private workout. No, he said. James had already run the 40-yard dash and completed the vertical jump, the broad jump, the bench press and positional drills at the NFL combine. He did the short shuttle and the three-cone drill at Florida State's pro day. And he didn't plan on doing anything else.

The Bucs were not pleased with this and let him know it. But he wasn't concerned. He was living in Southern California, working out at Proactive Sports Performance on the advice of his agency, Athlete's First.

On draft night, the Bucs traded down from the seventh pick. They ended up with the 12th pick and passed James again. When he dropped out of the top 12, James was discouraged. Then the Chargers called when they were on the clock with the 17th pick.

Those were the same Chargers whose facilities were a five-minute drive from where James had been living and training. "I loved Cali," he says. "I was hoping to come to Cali. But my agent was like, no way, you'll be gone way before then."

James is an interesting mix, part Florida country, part Tinseltown glitter. He can take you around to the best lakes in Central Florida to catch bass, catfish and mullet. And he can show you where to shop for Gucci or Louis Vuitton in downtown L.A.

He can get dirty, and he can clean up. Smith, a veteran quarterback who has experienced almost all the NFL has to offer from coast to coast, has a name for James—"The Golden Child." He makes a point of calling him that before every game. "You're special," Smith tells him. "This is why you are here. This is why you were a first-round pick. Because you are chosen."

James does not argue. "God has blessed me with size, speed, power," he says. "He pretty much blessed me with everything I could want."

Before the draft, Russell prayed the Bucs would not draft her son. Even though she was a Bucs fan, she thought he would not do well there. "I'm very pleased with where he went," she says. "Everybody has somewhere they fit. He fits there. The market is good in California. Derwin is the type of guy who loves to style. It's perfect for him."

Now, it's difficult to imagine him in anything but Chargers blue and gold.

"Why did he say ball as his first word?" Russell asks.

We know the answer.

"Every step he made," she says, "it was all toward this. Everybody has their destiny in life. This was his."

How Derwin James Became the Perfect Defender for the Modern NFL

Gus Bradley couldn't believe what was happening. The Chargers defensive coordinator and his staff were huddled in Bradley's office during this year's NFL draft, waiting for the team to make its selection with the 17th overall pick. They watched as several touted defensive back prospects flew off the board—Denzel Ward at no. 4 to the Browns, Minkah Fitzpatrick at no. 11 to the Dolphins—while Derwin James, one of the team's top targets, remained. Heading into the draft, few in the Chargers' organization thought they would ever be in range to land a player they viewed as a future star. "To be honest, it was never in my mind," Bradley says. "I didn't think he would be there. Just like everybody else."

Like he does with the entire pool of draft-eligible secondary players, Chargers defensive backs coach Ron Milus did his due diligence on James last spring. Milus saw a physical marvel of a safety who was as comfortable near the line of scrimmage as he was playing a deep center field. But as he dug through the tape, Milus figured that landing James in the middle of the first round was a pipe dream. "I guess there was a possibility," Milus says. "But as you continue to watch tape through February, March, and into April, you say, 'I don't think there's a lot of guys like this.'" On the night of the first round, though, James continued to fall. And when Green Bay—thought to be another potential James destination—traded the 14th pick to New Orleans and moved back to no. 18, the dream started to become a reality. "Once it got to be two or three picks from us, it was, 'He's gonna be there, he's gonna be there,'" Milus says.

As the excitement around the Chargers' facility built, James sat in the greenroom at AT&T Stadium, deflated. He'd been a two-time All-ACC defender with Florida State. His leadership within the program was lauded by every coach on the Seminoles staff. He'd dominated the scouting combine in Indianapolis, and was universally expected to go in the top 10. Yet there he sat, watching player after player get drafted ahead of him. "After [pick] 12, I was like, 'Oh, man, what did I do wrong?'" James says. "I know I'm better than the guys they've been picking before me. I haven't been in trouble. I haven't done anything. I did good at the combine. I don't understand. It doesn't make sense."

Finally, when pick no. 17 rolled around, elation ran through Bradley's office. One of the draft's most gifted players had fallen into the Chargers' lap. "When he was there, it was an easy choice," Milus says. James arrived in Los Angeles about two weeks later, and almost immediately both he and the team's defensive staff realized that James was a perfect fit within the Chargers defense. By Week 1 he'd broken into the starting lineup, and he's spent the season building his case as the most impactful rookie in this entire class.

Through 12 weeks, James has 3.5 sacks, two interceptions, and six quarterback hits—the only player in the league to hit all of those marks. He's been just as versatile for the Chargers as he was for Florida State, with his role seeming to shift by the minute depending on what the unit has needed. He's proved capable of covering speedy receivers, rushing the passer, or laying a huge hit in the open field. In many ways, James is the perfect defender for the modern NFL: a 215-pound chameleon who can blend in at any position, allowing the Chargers to combat any approach an opposing offense might take.

In an era when even the best defenders struggle to stay relevant, James has helped propel one of the best units in the NFL, and become the Defensive Rookie of the Year favorite in the process. "In the first round, you hope that you get a player on your team that can come in and be impactful, but it doesn't always work out that way," Bradley says. "We all felt like this guy's got a chance to be that person. ... You could just tell his passion for the game. You thought, 'This guy has a chance to be special.'"

To this day, James isn't sure how his name made it to the coaches at Florida State. In late February 2012, he was invited to attend the Seminoles' junior day recruiting event in Tallahassee—as a freshman. At the time, the Haines City, Florida, native was far from fully developed, but that didn't stop the program from giving him the VIP treatment. "They were showing me more attention than the guys who were [rising] juniors and seniors," James says. "I was kind of confused."

Near the end of the daylong visit, James and his father, Derwin James Sr., were talking with Florida State assistant Odell Haggins when head coach Jimbo Fisher invited the trio into his office. There, Fisher proceeded to lay out his pitch and expressed his desire to have James join the team after graduation. The 14-year-old froze. "I was just shocked to be in the room with Jimbo Fisher," James says. "I was just sitting there smiling. I didn't know what 'an offer' meant." After walking out of Fisher's office, Derwin Sr. tried to explain what had just happened. "I said, 'Pooh Bear, you know what he just asked you?'" James Sr. says. "He's offering you a scholarship to go play ball here."

The word "scholarship" set off a bell in James's mind. "I said, I wanna come here," James says. "And [James Sr.] said, 'Well, go down and tell him that.'" Later that day, while father and son were making the more than four-hour drive home, a story announcing James's decision showed up on ESPN.com. That's when James knew it was real. Later that year, he got the Seminoles logo tattooed on his left shoulder. He never took another official visit.

When James got to FSU as a freshman in 2015, he made a quick impression on virtually everyone in the program. On the first day of team workouts, then-sophomore running back Dalvin Cook noticed that James wasn't the typical first-year player. "I knew how freshmen were when they came in," Cook says, "and he was always a little different." That night, Cook invited James to his apartment, and the pair played Madden until dawn. "I get a vibe from people, and he just gave me a vibe," Cook says. "And it just built from there."

At Haines City High School, James had played just about every position on the field. He spent time at quarterback, running back, receiver, safety, cornerback, and defensive end—every spot except the offensive line. While playing in the secondary during a game in his junior season, James noticed how slowly the center lifted his head after snapping the ball. He asked his coaches if, for at least one play, he could move to defensive tackle, just to see what he could do. They agreed, and on his first snap at the line, he shot into the backfield and made the tackle. "I've told people, and it's crazy, but he's the only player I've ever coached in my entire career that I think could have started at all 11 positions on defense," says former Florida State and current Tennessee defensive coordinator Charles Kelly. "That's the truth."

During his first season in Tallahassee, the FSU staff tried to replicate the multidimensional role that James filled in high school. They created new packages to take advantage of his pass-rushing ability. In other scenarios, he'd roam the deep part of the field. Kelly's goal was to give his young wrecking ball a chance to affect every play, no matter what the offense called. "When you put him in the deep part of the field the whole time, people can throw away from him and take him out of the game," Kelly says. "When we moved him closer to the ball, they had to account for him."

James finished his freshman season at Florida State with 91 tackles and an astonishing 9.5 tackles for loss, including 4.5 sacks. He also tallied four passes defended. It was the sort of production that few college players, let alone freshmen, could ever hope to achieve. James seemed destined to emerge as the school's next great defensive player, one who would lead the unit for seasons to come. Then came the agonizing moment that would define his future in ways he never could have imagined.

The recovery process for injured athletes can be lonely. Isolation replaces the constant camaraderie that players are used to. As James sat in a cold hospital room in September 2016, waiting to have surgery on his injured left meniscus, he wondered what he'd done to end up in such a desolate place. "When you're going through that process, it's hard," James says. "When you're away from the game, you're not as important."

James had entered his sophomore season with soaring expectations. Almost every outlet in the country listed him as a preseason All-American, and many said that he was on his way to becoming college football's next legendary defender. Yet during the second half of FSU's second game of the season, he shredded the cartilage in his left knee. James tried to stay on his feet as he dropped the hammer on a receiver making a catch down the left sideline, causing his left cleat to catch awkwardly in the turf. The Seminoles beat Charleston Southern in a blowout, but an MRI later that week revealed that his meniscus was torn. James was ruled out for the year. The following week, without James there to spy Heisman Trophy hopeful Lamar Jackson, Florida State was stomped by Louisville, 63-20.

In need of a companion for the quiet moments during his rehab, James bought a pitbull puppy. He nicknamed him Third, a nod to both his jersey number and the dog's full name: Derwin James III. On James's worst days, when he could do little else but watch NBA games from the couch, Third would plop his head down in Derwin's lap and provide some much-needed comfort. "He knew when I was down," James says. "He knew when I was hurt. He could sense it." They became partners in James's rehab. The first time James was able to jog, Third was at his side. "He was on the road to recovery with me," James says.

As soon as the knee had healed enough for him to get around, James began an unlikely routine. Like other players on the team who were battling injuries, he'd arrive at the FSU training room for 7 a.m. treatment before heading to his classes. But James went a step further: He would go to the facility early and attend each day's script meeting. There, he'd watch as Fisher, Kelly, and the rest of the coaching staff built the list of offensive plays that Florida State would use in that day's practice to test the defense's weak spots. Over time, sitting in on those sessions helped him grasp the broader details of the defense that he'd never needed to learn before. He began to understand various pass-protection techniques and different blocking schemes, and which keys tipped the offense's hand before the ball was snapped.

Away from the daily rigors of his specific roles, he finally saw the defense as a complete unit rather than a collection of individual positions. And slowly, the player who possessed the physical ability to start at all 11 defensive positions built the mental acuity to play them. "He saw [the game] from a coach's perspective," Fisher says. "The things we used to make a big deal about, that you might not understand if you're in the fray, when you stand back, you see how critical that might be to the big picture of things. That's where he grew."

James spent the rest of the season attached to Kelly's hip. During practices, he would be at Kelly's side, offering bits of advice to teammates whenever possible. On game day, he'd be in Kelly's ear, asking why he ran a certain blitz on third down, or what he saw going up against a particular offensive formation.

The experience was formative for James's football education, and it had more wide-ranging effects on how he was viewed among his teammates. They noticed that despite his injury, he stood with them every step of the way. "He knew he was a leader and that [people] looked up to him, still, so he knew he had to be around," Cook says. When James recovered and came back for his junior season, that dedication gave his voice authority. James has often been described as the dominant presence in a program full of strong-willed players. "He was an alpha dog," Kelly says, "but he was never demeaning. He'd treat a walk-on safety the same way he treated Jalen Ramsey."

In James's mind, he could lead the program only if his teammates understood who he truly was, in every respect. "I'm a guy that if we share the same color jersey and we're in the same locker room, you're like my brother," James says. "I've got to be able to trust you. I've got to know you. And for you to even listen to how I am as a leader, you need to at least know how I am off the field."

James declared for the NFL draft after a stellar bounceback season in which he racked up 84 tackles, including 5.5 for a loss. When professional teams inquired about him, Kelly gave a uniform response. He told each of them that if James didn't play football, he could be a CEO—that people gravitate toward him in a way that was difficult to explain. "I told them, 'He can be the face of your franchise,'" Kelly says. "And you'll be happy about it."

From the time he was old enough to walk, James caused mischief. When he was 6, he and some friends were playing with fire in the backyard of his mother's house and, long story short, they burned up the entire yard. Shanita Russell still doesn't know how the blaze began, but based on the size of the flames, she assumes it involved some spilled gasoline from the lawn mower. Two years before that, James had snuck his way into the laundry room, grabbed some spray paint, and painted a green racing stripe and gold wheels on Russell's white 1989 Ford Escort. With his custom paint job finished, he ran inside to show his mother his work. He thought she would love it. "He painted the tires, the hubcaps, everything," Russell says. "I was so upset with him, but I couldn't punish him. Because he didn't think he did anything wrong!"

To make matters worse, Derwin was also a quick learner. He'd watch as Russell used the childproof locks on the kitchen cabinet, studying how they operated so he could plan his next caper. "If you turned your back one second, he [would be] into something," Russell says.

That curiosity got James into plenty of trouble as a kid, but on the field it's been crucial in developing his singular style of play. While NFL assistants are often quick to badmouth the quality of coaching that players receive in college, Bradley and Milus both laud the role Florida State's staff had in building James's varied skill set. In particular, they both point to the work of former FSU defensive ends coach Brad Lawing, whom James credits as his pass-rushing mentor.

Their work together started one afternoon during James's freshman season. James was waiting for FSU's special teams session to end when Lawing approached him. "I said, instead of sitting there wasting your dang time standing around, you wanna come over here and learn how to rush the quarterback?" Lawing says. James had the natural speed and strength to hold his own at the line, but took time to learn the more advanced elements of pass rushing, especially how to bend back toward the quarterback as he worked around the edge.

Soon, the novel idea of a safety rushing the passer transformed into a feature of Florida State's defense. James started to split his time between the meeting rooms for defensive backs and for defensive ends, joining the latter when the team installed its pressure packages. James and Lawing worked together every day, to the point where Lawing began to use him in the same way he did Jadeveon Clowney when Lawing was an assistant at South Carolina. During a 27-2 victory over Florida in November 2015, James demolished a Gators tackle with a hump move more fit for Reggie White than a 215-pound safety. “[He succeeded] not only with his speed and his change-of-direction skills, but his power,” Lawing says. “A lot like [Chargers pass rusher] Melvin Ingram, Derwin’s one of those guys [that], for his size, his power index is really high. That’s why he can rush guys that are 60, 70, 80 pounds heavier than he is.”

That inventiveness and Lawing’s willingness to let James be more than a safety moonlighting as a pass rusher is what James appreciates most about their time together. “The mind-set that, ‘If you’re gonna rush the quarterback, you’re gonna rush the quarterback,’” James says. “‘You’re not just a DB.’ I feel like that’s what got me better and what got me good at it.”

When James reported for OTAs in early May, Bradley decided to keep every defensive option open for him. The staff’s plan was to try James at several positions across the defense and decide which roles suited him best. Slowly, they learned that James could thrive no matter where they dropped him. “Sometimes, he’s like a defensive end, and he’s rushing,” Milus says. “Sometimes he’s playing dime and he’s doing different things. We’re just using the skills that he has, and he’s been able to handle it.” During the Chargers’ season opener, a 38-28 loss to the Chiefs, James notched his first career sack and knocked down a pass about 40 yards downfield that had been intended for De’Anthony Thomas—the same De’Anthony Thomas who clocked a 4.34-second 40-yard dash time at his pro day in 2014.

Plenty of teams use big-bodied safeties like James all over the field. What sets James apart, though, is that he isn’t just playing multiple roles to keep offenses off balance. He truly excels in each one. In the same way that his pass-rush snaps were more than just a gimmick at Florida State, James’s role as a blitzer has been a defining trait of the Chargers defense. On 43 rushes, he’s logged four sacks, two additional quarterback hits, and nine hurries. That’s good for a pass rush productivity number of 22.1, according to Pro Football Focus. No other player has a PRP higher than 16.7 this season.

In L.A.’s Week 2 game against the Bills, Bradley says one play in particular showed him just how effective James could be when deployed in this regard. On a hard play fake in the second quarter, James ignored the Bills running back and made a beeline for quarterback Josh Allen, eventually dragging him down in the backfield. “That play really jumped out to me—all of us as a coaching staff—that this guy has some unique skill sets,” Bradley says. “He’s got the speed and the power but the instincts too.” Bradley and Milus change James’s role each game, and every Monday, Derwin drives to the facility having no idea what he’ll be asked to do that week. He typically ventures a guess based on the other team’s offense and what he already knows about the personnel, but every so often, he’s dead wrong. When the Chargers were preparing to face off with the Rams in Week 3, James figured he’d spend most of the game close to the line of scrimmage to combat running back Todd Gurley. Instead, the Chargers’ scheme called for him to play the deep part of the field for most of the game.

There are other weeks, though, when his prediction is spot-on. James assumed that he’d be asked to play on the end of the line of scrimmage against the Seahawks in Week 9 to help contain Russell Wilson. He was right, and the Chargers held Seattle to just 17 points on the day. The Seahawks have scored at least 27 in their three games since. “Every week, I come in with the mind-set of, ‘Whatever you need me to do,’” James says. “‘Whatever role I need to play. Do I need to play deep? Do I need to play short? Do I need to play end?’ I tell coach, ‘It don’t matter what you call. It doesn’t matter the play. Just call it.’”

For as smooth as James’s transition into the NFL has been, his adjustment to life in L.A. has taken some getting used to. At 22 years old, this is the first time James has really had to fend for himself. Before this fall, he’d never paid his own rent, or set up an account with the gas company. “I was on my own in college, but this is much different,” James says. “The bills in college came in Florida State’s name. It’s real now. It’s like I’m really living life.”

The veteran members of the Chargers secondary have helped ease the process. Cornerback Casey Hayward even connected James with his personal chef to help him figure out his diet. The way James tells it, the defensive backs group is the most tight-knit collection of teammates he’s ever been around. “Even more than what it was in college, we’ve got each other’s back,” James says. “It’s a perfect situation.”

When James dropped that phrase—“perfect situation”—it was the fourth time he’d used it within a half hour. It applies to his role on this team, and could just as easily apply to how he fits within the NFL at large. In a league defined by offense, James has been able to change games from every level of Bradley’s scheme. While high-powered, diverse offensive systems force most defenses to be reactionary, James has allowed the Chargers to dictate the action.

As Derwin talks about life in Southern California and playing with Hayward and the rest of this secondary, his anxious wait on draft day feels like it happened forever ago. When asked whether he’s bitter about his fall to no. 17, James shakes his head. “Hell no. I’m happy. I’m a Charger, man. We’re [8-3]. I wouldn’t want to be no other place.”

Drawing Inspiration: Desmond King and His Brother Devon Form a Powerful Bond Through Art

By Jenny Vrentas
Sports Illustrated
December 20, 2018

Desmond King II reveled in the energy of the raucous crowd. His Chargers trailing by eight early in the fourth quarter at Heinz Field, the second-year cornerback helped get the ball back by making the tackle on a pivotal third-and-forever. Moments later, he was backpedaling to field a Steelers punt at his own 27-yard line. Sidestepping the first would-be tackler, he darted up the left numbers, zipped past two outstretched defenders and then cut diagonally toward daylight.

King’s 73-yard touchdown was a galvanizing play in a 33–30, early December win that helped establish Los Angeles as one of the NFL’s best teams. In the stands high above the end zone where King scored, his mom, Yvette Powell, nearly lost her voice screaming. And back in Southern California, King’s younger brother, Devon, watched the moment play out on Sunday Night Football in a way that only he could see: inspiration for another work of art.

Since Desmond was a freshman at Iowa, Devon has filled sketchpads and three-ring binders with illustrations of his brother’s football career. Over time, the drawings have displayed leaps in artistic talent, with cartoonish depictions evolving into intricate lifelike portraits. Flipping through the pages on a recent Tuesday evening, Devon stopped on one of his favorites: Desmond’s first big moment with the Hawkeyes. It shows King holding the ball triumphantly above his head after recovering a Northwestern fumble and captures the finer details of his Iowa uniform: the creases in his jersey, the Nike sweatbands around his wrists, the white towel tucked into the back of his waistband.

“I thought it was cool seeing somebody draw me,” says Desmond, who hasn’t always been able to catch people’s eyes out on the field.

At East English Village Prep in Detroit, King set a state record with 29 career interceptions, but he felt his dream of playing defensive back for a Power 5 school slip away when a Michigan State coach told him he’d be better off as a running back in the MAC. King was committed to Ball State until Phil Parker, the defensive coordinator at Iowa, visited East English a week before signing day on a tip from a high school coach in the area. “Everybody doubted him, but he had great instincts,” Parker says. “That’s hard to coach.”

After an injury opened the door for playing time as true freshman, King was starting for the Hawkeyes and making impact plays like that fumble recovery against Northwestern. Just two years later he won the Jim Thorpe Award as the best defensive back in college football, with eight interceptions. But NFL teams still thought him too small (he’s 5’10”) and too slow (he ran a 4.5 40 at his Pro Day), and he fell to the Chargers in the fifth round of the 2017 draft.

Yet those instincts have made him a valuable asset on special teams and defense. He has three interceptions this season, including a pick-six of Russell Wilson, and he has thrived in the slot even against tight ends such as the Chiefs’ Travis Kelce, who had an eight-inch height advantage in Week 15 but was held to 61 receiving yards and no TDs. “Tell him he can’t do something, and he’ll go do it,” L.A. coach Anthony Lynn says. “He finds a way.”

For all his success, King doesn’t even think of himself as the most accomplished person in his family. He bestows that title on his 19-year-old brother with whom he shares a condo. “His story, and how he hasn’t let anything stop him from doing what he loves to do,” King says. “That motivates me.”

Long before Devon was a freshman at the Orange County campus of the Art Institute of California, with dreams of one day working for an animation studio, he stopped talking and doctors weren't sure why.

At first they thought the 2-year-old had ADHD and prescribed him medicine, but Powell, a mom of four boys who worked as a medical assistant for a cardiology clinic and as a home healthcare aide, pushed for more information. When he was four, Devon was diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder, a condition that affects brain development and creates challenges with communication, social skills and behavior. Devon was on the high-functioning end, but Powell remembers doctors telling her his future would likely be community college or a trade school. "I wanted him to go to college," she says, "because I didn't want him to think he was different from anyone else."

During Devon's nonverbal years, his family noticed his unusual ability to communicate through drawing. If he wanted to eat McDonald's chicken nuggets, he'd sketch out the golden arches or the highway exit number they'd need to take to drive there. When Devon was nearly five he came home from school and showed Powell a flipbook he'd made, illustrating twins in his class getting into a tussle on the playground. "Mama, did you see this?" he asked, reducing Powell to tears upon hearing her son's first words in more than two years. Still, it wasn't always easy for him to have conversations. "The toughest part for him was feeling isolated," Desmond says. "Not being able to communicate, I couldn't imagine what that would be like."

Devon's elementary school in west Detroit had limited resources, so Powell always sent him to school with art supplies, telling his teachers that drawing kept him calm and focused. "If he had a pencil and paper, he didn't care about anything else," Powell says. "And that's still how it is. You have to pry his pencils away. He loves drawing, just like Desmond loves football."

The two have always been close. The East English coaching staff created jobs for Devon, asking him to be a ball boy or hold the down markers, so he could be near his brother. Devon is a perfectionist, a trait associated with autism, so if he didn't get a top grade in school he would retreat into his bedroom closet and shut the door. Desmond would go in and coax him out to play Super Smash Bros. on their GameCube.

In September 2012, the boys' family received unthinkable news: Armon Golson, Desmond and Devon's older brother, had been shot and killed in Detroit. He was 21. Desmond had taken up football because his two older brothers had, and just three days after Armon's death, he insisted on playing in a game against Southeastern High. He ran for three touchdowns in the 39-0 win.

"Desmond made promises to his brother before he passed that he would stay on track for football and school," Powell says. "After he lost him, it made Desmond take Devon under his wing. He wanted to keep Devon, like Armon kept him."

After Desmond went away to Iowa City he would go home whenever he could, but the nearly eight-hour drive to Detroit was difficult to balance with a full course load and a busy football schedule. Devon would watch his brother play on TV, and when he saw him make that fumble recovery against Northwestern, he told his mom he wanted to make a drawing for him. Desmond hung it in his dorm room for his friends and teammates to enjoy. "I was inspired when people were seeing what I was doing," Devon says.

Devon then began drawing even more—his brother's teammates, coach Kirk Ferentz, Desmond's fellow Thorpe Award finalists. Jackie Hargreaves liked Devon's work so much that she commissioned him to draw two more illustrations of her son, Vernon, then a cornerback at Florida. She insisted on paying him, becoming Devon's first customer.

Desmond could have left for the NFL after his junior season, but he fulfilled the promise he made to his mom and older brother and finished his degrees in African-American studies and broadcast journalism. But he wasn't going back to school alone. He and his brother made a pitch to their mom: What if Devon spent his senior year in Iowa? City High was just up the road from King's off-campus apartment, where he lived with two other students, including Charles Boyd, a close high school friend. Plus, the move would help prepare Devon for campus life. Powell was reluctant, but says, "Devon benefited more being with Desmond."

While Powell went to Iowa for extended stays, Desmond was often the one signing permission slips and helping Devon with homework. Devon passed the ACT, making college possible. The week after Desmond was drafted, he escorted Devon to his senior prom. Devon rolled up like no student ever had: in a white sequined suit, with his big brother and three buddies from Detroit dressed like the agents from Men In Black.

"Devon was so proud of Desmond, but I think Desmond was more proud of Devon," says Parker, the DC at Iowa. "You could see it in his face, that he thought what Devon was doing was more important than any of his accomplishments."

When the Chargers picked King, he wanted to make sure it was also an opportunity for his brother. Devon lived at home in Detroit during Desmond's rookie year, but he moved to Southern California in February, bringing his pencils and sketchpads. King is covering his tuition at the Art Institute. "Putting him in school," he says, "was something very important to me. He saw what my mom went through with my older brother and it wasn't positive. I took it upon myself to show him the right way, to keep his mind focused and stay on the right things."

While King spends long hours at the Chargers' facility, Devon takes Ubers to and from campus, where he completed four courses this semester. For the final project in his Acting & Movement for Animators class, Devon had to produce a short film. Desmond starred in it, re-creating a scene from the movie Friday. (It got an A.) The school's Orange County campus is closing this month, so Devon plans to continue his media arts degree at UC-Irvine in the spring. He's considering living on his own—the campus is just a short drive from his brother's condo, and Desmond is helping him get his license—but they'll still end up doing everything together.

The Chargers' defensive backs call themselves the Jack Boyz, a nod to jacking, or stealing, the football. Devon—"one of the Jack Boy brothers," says cornerback Michael Davis—joins them for bowling nights out, and he drew all of their faces in one of his most recent illustrations. You can easily spot Pro Bowl cornerback Casey Hayward grinning near the top, next to bearded safety Jahleel Addae. Rookie Derwin James, the team's first-round pick, is unmistakable in the bottom row, second from right. After one of the Chargers' 11 wins this season, Devon showed it to his brother's teammates outside the StubHub Center. "It was fire," James says. "He drew my hair right and everything."

A few weeks ago, King wore Devon's artwork on the field, during the NFL's "My Cause, My Cleats" initiative. Devon says the design took him only about 10 minutes—cell-shaped letters spelling out Sickle-Cell Awareness in honor of Boyd, their Iowa roommate, who suffers from the blood disorder. King wore another one of Devon's designs last year, for autism awareness.

"His is a similar story to mine, but his is much tougher," King says. "I was going out there to represent him, too."

Desmond King has awarded the Chargers with big plays as a defensive back and returner

By Jeff Miller
LA Times
October 31, 2018 at 5:50 pm

The winner receives a trophy, which makes sense seeing how the award is one of the highest honors in college football.

A watch is presented as well, Desmond King passing the Rolex to his mother, Yvette Powell, as a thank you.

But how many people are aware that the annual recipient of the Jim Thorpe Award also is given a cowboy hat and a pair of boots?

All the defensive players for the Chargers know that now ... thanks to defensive coordinator Gus Bradley.

"I never thought that was going to catch up with me," King said Wednesday. "I was like, 'Oh, wow.' That's what the internet will do to you."

Bradley shattered the monotony of a recent team meeting by flashing a photo of King modeling the hat and boots while he was still at Iowa.

Among the Xs and O's, this was pure LOL. King, who won the award in 2015, swears that was the only time he tried on the items.

"The room busted up," safety Rayshawn Jenkins said. "Everybody was trying to get a picture of it real quick before they took it down."

This is the sort of fun a football team can have en route to 5-2, an encouraging start aided significantly by King, whose ability to make big plays has continued into his second NFL season.

The 5-foot-10, 200-pound defensive back is slightly undersized, except where it matters most.

King is coming off a game in which he had a season-high seven tackles. This followed a game in which he had two interceptions. This followed a few games in which he established himself as a kick-returning threat, too.

He generally plays nickel for the Chargers, but King's value suggests he is nothing but dollar signs.

"He's just a very instinctual player," Jenkins said. "And he can contribute all over the field. He's a total package out there."

Sunday, King and his teammates play at Seattle, the team the Chargers faced during King's introduction to the NFL — the 2017 preseason opener.

A fifth-round pick out of Iowa, King admits that back then he "still didn't know much." He ran out of the locker room hoping to somehow leave a positive impression.

As he does before every game, King prayed for safety, guidance and the strength to make at least one play.

He then had the Chargers' only interception and chased down Seahawks fullback Tre Madden from several yards back to punch loose the football and prevent a touchdown.

Standing on the Chargers sideline, coach Anthony Lynn was thoroughly impressed. And not the slightest bit surprised.

"He can do things sometimes that you just can't coach," Lynn said. "He doesn't have the height, the weight, the speed and all that. But if you look at Desmond, the thing I liked about him, tracking him all the way back to high school, he's always been a very productive player. That's not going to change when you get to the NFL. It's just a pattern of success."

Despite his success — and his Thorpe Award, won after his junior year — King was not the high draft selection many experts had forecast.

He returned to Iowa for his senior season, his production sliding somewhat but not as dramatically as his NFL stock did.

The situation was awkward, the Hawkeyes athletic department — as a courtesy — providing King and his family the use of the presidential suite in the Kinnick Stadium press box to watch the draft.

He also was celebrated that weekend with the honor of throwing out the first pitch before an Iowa baseball game.

Then King wasn't taken until the Chargers used the 151st overall pick to get him on the second day of the draft. The call was so tardy that King thought his phone might be broken since it was not ringing.

"I definitely thought he was going to be off the board in the first 45 or so picks," said Jenkins, who was drafted by the Chargers a round earlier. "I thought he was that good. I was shocked."

From that humble start, King has rebounded impressively, one highlight moment at a time. It was Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz who predicted before the draft that, no matter what King lacked physically, he would "find a good fit."

That is exactly what's happened with the Chargers, this fit so comfortable that a room full of teammates were left laughing at the image of the Detroit-raised King as a cowboy.

"Coach Gus was just playing around," King said. "He does that stuff all the time. He got me good with that one."

Jahleel Addae working hard to balance football and fatherhood in his first season as a dad

*By Sam Fortier
The Athletic
December 26, 2018*

Jahleel Addae grinned as the teeth sank into him.

"No, bubba," he said to his son, Zion. "That's dada's finger."

Jahleel gently tugged his hand out of his son's gummy mouth, and his fiancée, Lindsey Nelson, grabbed a wet wipe from the diaper bag. The family sat in a rear booth at AnQi, an Asian fusion restaurant near the team's facility. The couple's eight-month-old yawned, and they felt a little tired, too.

It was the 10th week of the NFL season and, even though Jahleel, a Chargers safety, found balancing football and fatherhood less challenging than he once expected, the demands on new parents still left Addae and Lindsey often struggling to stay awake through "Shooter," the USA Network drama they liked to watch together after Zion fell asleep.

"[Parenting] is tiring, but she's a beast," he said, nodding to Lindsey. "She wakes up in the middle of the night, feeds him."

"It's the coffee," Lindsey smiled.

More than a quarter of the Chargers are dads, and the importance of that role has become a topic of conversation a few times this season. Earlier this month, quarterback Philip Rivers announced he and his high-school sweetheart were expecting their ninth child. Last week, defensive tackle Brandon Mebane rejoined the team after about a month in Nebraska with his newborn daughter, who's receiving treatment there for a rare chromosomal disorder. Throughout the season, fullback Derek Watt has prepared for his first child, a boy, due in February.

Researchers believe football can, in a way different than other sports, foster a father-child relationship, which plenty of Chargers, including Rivers, Watt and rookie safety Derwin James, understand well, because their fathers helped coach them growing up. Many players, including Jahleel, see football as a teacher of life principles like toughness, time management and teamwork, but the sport appeals on an even deeper level. Studies show men are generally more drawn to team sports than individual ones and, across cultures, engage in more physical behavior.

Football hits on that cross-section, with rough-and-tumble conduct to the point of "legitimate danger on every play," noted Peter Gray, a University of Nevada, Las Vegas professor and co-author of "The Impact of Fathers on Children."

"You can't substitute or fake [the risks in football]," he said. "We marvel at physique and coordination, but there's still something about actual combat [that attracts us]."

Gray rotates through several theories for why the violence is so compelling: A miniature illustration of natural selection? A biological disposition on par with a man's increased upper-body strength, lung capacity and healing patterns? Internalized societal pressure on men to fight?

He can't pick one. Instead, those studies make him think about the regular conversations he has with his father about the Denver Broncos, even though "they suck right now." Gray, 48, has found the NFL to be a lifelong tether to his father, one of the few constant conversations in their evolving relationship as the years passed.

"[American football] is a phenomenon" in the global sports landscape, said David Cooper, a sports globalization expert and University of Toronto professor. Relationships steeped in American football are different than those built through most of the sports he studies and the one he played in England growing up, soccer, because they're often based upon playing together instead of watching.

Cooper added: "People follow the teams and the fancy stats even though [most people only play football] in high school and maybe university. That's quite strange."

Jahleel is one of the few who played beyond, but in many ways, he remains like any other parent. He wants Zion, at some point, to try soccer, track, basketball, baseball and football, though he won't let him start playing in a tackle football league at 7 years old like he did. The lessons Jahleel hopes sports will teach Zion are a long way off now, though, and Jahleel just wants to get through this season while staying in the moment, because he's heard how quickly children grow up.

Shortly after Zion was born on April 11, the Chargers started their offseason program, and Jahleel game-planned. Neither he nor Lindsey are from Southern California — they're natives of Florida and Washington state, respectively — so the lack of nearby family left childcare up to them. Doing it alone didn't frustrate the couple, partly because that was the plan from the beginning. In preparation for Zion's birth, they hadn't read books, attended classes, consulted experts or sought out any sort of advice.

"What's going to teach me more about my child than just experiencing it?" Jahleel said. "I'm not a big believer in doing it by the book because you don't know how your child's going to come out, their personality, what triggers it, what doesn't. I was like, let's see [what happens] and we'll adjust when we get there."

During training camp, Jahleel appreciated Chargers coach Anthony Lynn's approach to let his players out with enough time before 11 p.m. curfew to go home, receive rehabilitating "body work" and see their families. In six NFL seasons, Jahleel remembers camps that didn't let out so early, but that became another signal to the safety that his coach understood his players.

When Jahleel was younger, he grumbled about having to pay out-of-pocket for massage therapists to come to the house but, as he grew older, he realized conserving his body was part of the job. In a similar way, when the season started, the couple realized Jahleel needed to rest for work, so Lindsey handled the late-night cries from the bedside bassinet.

For her birthday in August, Jahleel bought Lindsey an espresso machine.

"She allows me to get my rest," Jahleel said. "There are days she's more tired than I am [after football]."

Jahleel settled into his routine, waking up at about 6:15 a.m. and heading to the facility not long after. He spent the day studying, in meetings and at practice. He tried to complete almost all of his work at the facility so that, when he got home a little after 5 p.m., he could spend time with his son and spell Lindsey, who'd watched their baby all day.

Mostly, they're homebodies with Zion, his ABC books, BabyFirst TV channel and basket of toys, including a rubber teether that looks like an old-school GameBoy. Right now, one of Jahleel's favorite activities is "Tummy Time," when he lays Zion on his stomach so he has to support himself and develop muscles in his neck, back and core to eventually crawl. The couple feels like he's close to crawling.

Diaper bags and early nights and talking about Zion is their new normal. It's taken some adjustment from both of them, but they like it. Jahleel understands his responsibility to balance football with his top priority of being a father. On the busses home from the airport after road games, Jahleel strategizes how he can spend the most time with Zion.

At the end of each day, he wants to be able to put work aside and model the same parenting he saw at home growing up with his mom and dad, who've been together for more than three decades. Jahleel's favorite moments are when Zion climbs into bed and makes funny faces at Lindsey and him.

"He's just seeing his mom and his dad interacting, chilling, watching TV, talking," Jahleel said. "I'll hold him up and she's saying something funny or I'm saying something funny, and he's looking at me looking at her." He paused.

"That's the best. That's mom and dad."

The Bosa Family—Brothers Joey and Nick, Father John—Share a Passion for Pass-Rushing

By Michael Rosenberg
Sports Illustrated
September 20, 2017

If you're in the market for an NFL pass rusher, call the Bosa family in Fort Lauderdale. John Bosa was the Dolphins' first-round pick in 1987, and his former brother-in-law, Eric Kumerow, was Miami's first-round pick the next year. John's son Joey was the Chargers' first-round pick last year, and Joey's brother, Nick, will be a first-round pick some day. For now, he's a burgeoning star at Ohio State.

Joey missed the first four games of his rookie year with a hamstring injury, but he spent the next 12 inducing whiplash at D-end. He finished with 10½ sacks in 12 games and won the league's Defensive Rookie of the Year award. He's the NFL's Next Great Defensive Player, and we may be late with that declaration. Pro Football Focus determined that in the first three games of his career, he was the most productive pass rusher in the league, per snap, more so than even Khalil Mack or Von Miller. (By year's end PFF had him as its fifth-ranked defensive end, but he generated pressure at a higher rate than any rookie in a decade of tracking players.) Joey, 22, entered this season feeling healthier, faster, more flexible and better prepared than he was last year, and yet he knows: He might not even be the best Bosa of his generation.

Nick Bosa is arguably the most promising defender on one of the nation's most talented teams, and his older brother is already projecting him as a top five pick in the 2019 draft, following his junior year. "He could go this year," Joey says, "except he's not allowed." In the matter-of-fact tone that is a family trademark, he adds, "If Nick sucked, I would tell you he sucked. But he doesn't suck."

Joey's nickname is Big Bear, and Nick calls himself Smaller Bear. But at 6' 4" and 270 pounds, Smaller is basically the same size as Big (6' 5", 270). The brothers have similar athletic gifts, but Nick, 20, learned to apply them at a younger age because he was always copying his brother. Joey was not a starter at national powerhouse St. Thomas Aquinas High until he was a junior; Nick started as a freshman. Joey was a four-star recruit; Nick had five stars.

"Every time I think I'm better than him at something, he just flies right by me," says Joey. "Ping-Pong. Lots of video games. We are obsessed with what we love, and what we love is football and our craft."

Ohio State defensive line coach Larry Johnson, tellingly, is not hitting the brakes on the hype machine. Asked if Nick can be another Joey, as Joey suggests, he says, "That's a true statement. He's just young. But he's got the tools to be really special." NFL Network analyst Mike Mayock hasn't yet watched much film on Nick—he's a true sophomore, after all—but in the little he's seen, "I just started laughing, because he looked like the same guy [as Joey]."

In addition to their more notable achievements, the Bosa boys have pulled off a rare sibling feat: They compete alongside each other more than against each other. They're best friends and remain in daily contact. Nick "is one of very few people I can be my true self around," says Joey. "Maybe the only person. I feel like he's just another piece of me."

The Matthews clan—Hall of Fame offensive lineman Bruce and three generations of Clays. The quarterbacking Mannings and Carrs. The punting Colquitts. Ronde and Tiki Barber. J.J. and T.J. Watt ... Cheryl and John Bosa did not set out to join these football families. They had other ideas for their boys, like baseball, soccer, tennis, golf, skiing. "I tried to keep them away from football as long as I could," John says, but they begged to play, so Mom and Dad let Joey give it a shot when he was eight. Nick, who is 27 months younger, threw a temper tantrum, telling his parents, "If you don't let me play too, I'm going to die." (That may, in fact, have been true. Back then, the boys were spending a lot of their time in the backyard playing Kill the Man with the Ball. In football, at least, the goal is merely to maim.)

Nick slept with a football every night and wanted to play every day, and so his parents finally relented. At the boy's first practice he was plugged in on offense. He tugged on a coach's shirt and asked to switch to defense, like his dad. Nick was seven. He has stayed on that side of the ball ever since.

Even then he had an instinctive understanding of how to use leverage and technique to get past an offensive lineman. Cheryl says Nick was "a savant" from the beginning. "People were like, What's happening here?" Nick says, "It was just simple for me."

Football began to take over the Bosas' lives only because that's what the boys wanted. Cheryl, a real estate agent, says she would have provided the same support "if it was piano lessons. It didn't matter. It's their passion." When Joey and Nick were in high school, John would wake them at five for breakfast and their morning workout, and they never complained.

"I swear, not one time," says John, who works in commercial real estate. "And football is the worst sport to practice. Baseball practice is a blast. Football practice is a grind. These guys have embraced it. You can't teach that. Parents who push, push, push ... I've seen it—the kids go the other way. If it's not in their heart, it's just not going to work out."

Even as Joey and Nick excelled, their parents stayed level, didn't get caught up in the hype. When Joey started high school, John imagined his son might one day earn a college scholarship. An offer from Alabama came the next year. And if Joey could do it, there was no doubt Nick would too. (Cheryl and John divorced when Joey was in junior high school, but the boys have remained their priority; John posed on Cheryl's patio for a photo accompanying this story, and they interviewed agents for Joey together.)

Joey and Nick fought plenty when they were younger. They didn't truly become friends until they played together for one season, in the fall of 2012, at St. Thomas Aquinas—Joey as a dominating defensive end, Nick as an undersized but highly effective D-tackle. John would sit in the top row, "as far away from the other parents as I could get." He didn't want to hear anybody yelling at his kids.

The boys may have wanted to play football because their father had, John admits, but "ultimately, they're just really good. When you have the genetic gifts they had ... they just loved it. It's a lot of fun to knock the crap out of people."

He pauses. "I miss it."

John Bosa is an American oddity: He reached the highest level in his field, defying astronomical odds, only to be labeled a failure. The Dolphins drafted him with the 16th pick out of Boston College, and he started just 21 games. If he is remembered at all, it's as a bust.

He politely disputes that label. In his second NFL season a guard dived at his left knee—legal at the time—and John tore three L's: ACL, MCL, PCL. "That really was the end of my career," he says. "I didn't know it, but I never came back from that." Technically he did come back, but he wasn't the same player; his first step was not as quick. In his fourth season his right knee went out, and that was the end of that.

"The transition from John Bosa the football player to just John Bosa was a very difficult one," he says, but he avoided traps that snare so many former players in that position. He did not, for example, exaggerate his gifts into a giant what-might-have-been. He believes he would have had a nice, long career if he'd stayed healthy, but he also says, "I was an overachieving guy. No one outworked me. But I didn't have the total package that [Nick and Joey] have. I didn't have that type of athleticism. I was more of a grinder."

That John did not try to recapture his greatness through the boys was just as well, because the game has changed since his playing days. In the 1980s defensive ends trained like weightlifters, more geared toward lifting a Porsche than running like one. And pass-rushing moves of that era were relatively simple: the bull rush, the club-and-rip, the spin. Quarterbacks took seven-step drops, which gave pass rushers more time to reach them.

Today's quarterbacks pass more often and take shorter drops, and defensive ends line up wider. Johnson, Ohio State's line coach, says "the hips and the hands are the most important things now. If you can flip your hips in a pass rush"—or point your hips toward the QB—"you have a great chance to be successful." (If John Bosa ever heard the phrase flip your hips in his days, it would have been at a Miami nightclub.) Today's rushers, Johnson says, shed blockers with "violent" hands—they initiate the fight instead of avoiding it.

That tutelage, John says, is why "Joey and Nick were better football players as freshmen at Ohio State than I ever was." He knows he couldn't have taught his boys to play this way even if he'd wanted. It would be like Orville Wright trying to teach somebody to fly a 747.

Joey, for one, has become a hips-and-hands evangelist, convinced that Johnson's techniques are revolutionizing the position. And he may be the one who proves it. In his rookie season he drew comparisons with J.J. Watt—another tall, white pass rusher from the Big Ten with a talented younger brother—but Joey points out that they are "pretty significantly different players." Watt, after all, weighs 290 pounds and could be an All-Pro defensive tackle if he played there. Says Joey, "[Watt] is a freakin' animal, moving guys out of the way. I like to think I combine finesse and power." (Not that Joey's lacking in moving-guys-out-of-the-way prowess. Says Mayock, "When he gets his hands on a player's body, it looks like he's got his hands on a steering wheel.")

What Watt and Bosa have in common is relentlessness. As a rookie Bosa earned a reputation for playing hard on every snap, which was especially impressive considering that he'd battled tendinitis in one knee for three years and that his lower back hurt enough that he had to stand up in the middle of meals to stretch. But he came to trust one of the Chargers' strength coaches, Todd Rice, so much that when the team cleaned out its staff in January, Bosa put Rice on his personal payroll. He plans to follow Rice's biomechanics-based workouts, emphasizing "joint integrity and elasticity," until he retires.

It's easy to confuse Big Bear and Smaller Bear, especially with Nick's wearing Joey's old number 97 Buckeyes jersey. (John also wore 97 at B.C. and in Miami; Joey has switched to 99.) They each love their labor more than its fruits; as Cheryl says, "They like the results of it, but they don't like the pomp and circumstances of it." They train together in the offseason and play Rocket League on PlayStation 4 together and seem exactly alike. But, of course, no two people really are.

"Joey has a shorter fuse," Cheryl says. "Nick is a very gentle being."

Joey: "You're not his friend."

Cheryl: "He was really kind to animals, the elderly—"

Joey: "Are you saying I'm violent with animals and the elderly?"

The differences are, in reality, subtle. Joey has longer arms, but Nick seems to have a quicker burst. Joey has a pigeon-toed walk. Nick likes to needle liberals on Twitter. (He is a huge fan of President Trump, more interested in politics than Joey.) Joey's a bit more intense and introverted. When you meet one of Joey's pals, his parents joke, "Congratulations! You've met all of Joey's friends."

When he was at Ohio State, Joey moved out of an apartment that he shared with running back Ezekiel Elliott because he wanted to focus on football. When the Chargers moved from San Diego to Los Angeles this year, the main difference for Joey was that he needed new takeout menus. "I didn't go out [partying] once in San Diego," he says. He can't even enjoy a couple of beers without feeling guilty. ("Sometimes we get yelled at by our parents for being antisocial," says one of his best friends, Alex Caruso.)

Nick goes out more, but that's largely because he's still in college. And that speaks to the biggest difference between the two, especially as it relates to football: their birth order. Nick followed Joey, so he just copied his older brother. But Joey followed John, and he felt some responsibility. "My dad came from nothing," Joey says. "He made a name for himself in the NFL. That's motivation for me. I had the talent; it's important for me to do something with it. I just want to do something to make [my parents] proud."

Joey opened this season with 1½ sacks in two games, and yet he admits that he still hears "that little voice in the back of my head that says You're never going to be good enough." If Nick (two sacks in three games) suffers from self-doubt, he doesn't show it. There's no way to know what they would be like if Nick had been born first, and it doesn't matter. The Chargers are fortunate to have one Bosa brother. Ohio State is fortunate to have the other. And every other team in football ought to consider itself lucky that there isn't a third.

How fatherhood made Chargers receiver Keenan Allen a better player

By Eric Williams
ESPN.com
October 9, 2018

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- Toward the end of a training camp in August, applause from a corner of the field near the players' friends and family tent interrupted a lull at the end of practice.

Los Angeles Chargers receiver Keenan Allen and fiancé Ciandra Monique had just announced that they were expecting their third child, a boy. Allen did so by kicking a football filled with baby-blue dust that erupted into the air.

The couple already has two daughters, 3-year-old Kamari and 1-year-old Kaliyah. Allen, 26, joked that having the girls first has helped prepare him for his first boy, due in January.

"I'm definitely excited," Allen said about the new addition. "I think it's a little better to have the girls first, just having patience in dealing with the girls and how you discipline them."

"I wasn't in a house with girls growing up. It was all boys, so I know how to raise a boy, and I'm ready to raise a boy."

Entering his sixth NFL season, Allen points to fatherhood as something that has made him a more mature and accountable player and has led to more success on the field.

The Cal product had his best season as a pro in 2017, playing a full 16 games for the first time in his NFL career and finishing with 102 catches for 1,393 receiving yards and six touchdowns.

For his efforts, Allen earned his first trip to the Pro Bowl and won the Associated Press Comeback Player of the Year, returning to the field after suffering an ACL knee injury that cut short his 2016 campaign.

Since the start of the 2017 season, Allen ranks fifth in the league in receiving yards (1,765), sixth in receptions (134) and second in receptions of 10 or more yards (85). Through five games this season, he has 32 catches for 372 yards and a touchdown.

Allen said he leaned on older players such as Philip Rivers, a father of eight, and mentor Antonio Gates to help balance family and football.

"In different phases of their life, it's affected me in different ways," Rivers said when asked about the responsibility of raising a family. Rivers and wife Tiffany had their first child while still at NC State. "I think the ups and downs of the game allow for teachable moments, whereas they can see me actually deal with some adversity firsthand, like an interception for a touchdown to lose the game -- all of these moments over 15 years."

"Obviously, it helps you keep things in perspective. Whether it's a good game or a bad game, I pull into the driveway, and there's scooters and bikes everywhere, and I go, 'You know what? Things are going to be all right.'"

Gates knew early on that Allen had the talent to develop into a special player, but he needed to see the young receiver's commitment to being great through hard work and preparation. That has occurred over the past two years.

"I just remember when I first had my child, it forced me to grow up," Gates said. "Not to say that he wouldn't have -- who knows? But it almost forces your hand because you start understanding, as a man, you start doing the things that you need to do."

"I just remember we would do things in conditioning. And I would always jokingly tell him, 'Hey, I want to pass the torch, but you've got to work harder.' [laughs] It's just been amazing to see a guy who we all thought had the ability [to] grow say, 'I can be one of the best players on this team and in the league.'"

Allen said he has slowed down on going to the club and the casino as he has gotten older, taking up hobbies such as golf when he spends time away from home.

Allen's used to being around family and was surrounded by aunts, uncles and cousins in his hometown of Greensboro, North Carolina, where he grew up with older brothers Zach Maynard and Durel Lang.

"Family was big and has always been big," Allen said. "Cousins and aunts, we always lived in the same neighborhood. The whole family was probably five to 10 miles away from each other growing up, so I've kind of always been family-oriented and had a big supporting cast growing up."

Allen also is a self-taught musician who considered pursuing a music career. With his interest in music, it has become part of his daughters' daily life.

"They're big music fans and big Disney fans," Allen said of his daughters. "So they're singing, jumping and dancing all day."

GREENSBORO, N.C. -- He was not supposed to be on the football field in the first place. Keenan Allen was just 6 years old, and the minimum age requirement was 7. As if that weren't reason enough for concern, he was playing up two age divisions, against much bigger 9- and 10-year-olds.

Stepdad Scott Lang and his wife watched anxiously as the opening kickoff went up, and Allen, on the very first play of his very first game, disappeared beneath a wave of tacklers. When Allen emerged, tears filled his eyes. His equipment was too big, causing his chin strap to slide over his throat and momentarily choke him.

Lang felt a sense of trepidation. He was the one who had fudged the paperwork so Allen could play on the same team as his older brothers, and now, as the emotional youngster walked slowly toward the sideline, Lang was concerned not only about his son's health, but also his own.

"I thought, 'I'm going to need a place to live if he's hurt,'" Lang said over the summer. "I looked at him and said, 'You gonna cry? You want me to take you out?' He's shaking his head, and the helmet is just wobbling. I told him, 'Son, I'm gonna give you some advice: Grown men play this game, not little boys. It don't matter what the age is, you've got to be a gladiator to step inside this box. If your mindset ain't that, you're not gonna be successful.'"

The words struck harder than any defender ever could. Allen took them and carried the message around as if it were a backpack, toting it to every game and every workout, using it as fuel to become a recreation-league legend, high school All-American and, now, Pro Bowl wide receiver for the Los Angeles Chargers.

To watch the 6-foot-2, 211-pound wideout on the field is to witness someone who plays the game with both a carefree attitude and a fierce competitiveness. The former can be seen anytime music fills the air before a game or during timeouts. He dances as if no one is around, moving his body with the rubber-band elasticity of singer Chris Brown, one of his personal favorites. And when the music stops and the action begins, mild-mannered Keenan gives way to alpha-dog Slayer.

"I [adopted] that name my rookie year," he says, slowly stroking his long black beard. "I had some fans commenting on my social-media page, and one dude was like, 'You're a slayer.' I just took it and ran with it. I'm like, Yeahhhhhh, that's a good little name. It kind of goes with my game, 'cause I be killing dudes."

The resume reflects a highly productive player whose only opponent has been injuries. Allen earned All-Rookie and Rookie of the Year honors from various organizations in 2013 after breaking team rookie records with five 100-yard receiving games and 71 receptions. Two years later, he caught 67 passes through eight games -- third-most in league history at the midpoint of a season -- but missed the second half of the year because of a kidney injury. He returned healthy in 2016 and was having his way with former Chiefs Pro Bowl cornerback Marcus Peters in Week 1, drawing two penalties and catching six passes for 63 yards in the first half. But a torn ACL did to him again what no defender could: shut him down.

"I was just like, 'Whaaaaat? I just came off an injury. I can't play again?' " he recalled. "My total mindset after rehab was just to come back and play all 16 games. Just let my game take care of itself."

Last season, the man who loves to play Beethoven on the piano turned in a classical performance while playing the full year. He finished with a franchise-record 102 receptions, set a league record with at least 10 catches, 100 yards receiving and a touchdown catch in three consecutive games and earned his first trip to the Pro Bowl. He was in such a rhythm with quarterback Philip Rivers that he never realized he was making history. Everything was coming so easily, it felt like he and Rivers were alone, tossing the ball around the park.

There will come a day when he will fully appreciate the significance of his record-setting accomplishment last year, but that time is down the road, because so much work remains. While others celebrate the 1,393 receiving yards he recorded in 2017, he essentially shrugs, because that trailed the receiving totals of Antonio Brown and Julio Jones, contemporaries who often are mentioned as the best at the position. Allen won't be satisfied until people regard him as the best in the game.

"I'm very hungry to be the best ever and be recognized by everybody," he says. "It's very important to me. That's why I play the game -- that's why I've always played the game -- to be the best no matter where I was at, no matter what I was doing."

Allen pulls up to the Greensboro home of his uncle, Maurice Harris Sr., and parks his black SUV on the gravel driveway. It is a beautiful July afternoon, not too hot or humid, with rays of sunlight filtering through outstretched tree branches. He walks to the back of the house and stops to reminisce with family and friends. He and his cousin, Maurice Harris Jr., a third-year wide receiver with the Redskins, were nearly inseparable as children, and the backyard was their playground.

On one side of the driveway is a towering tree that still bears marks where a backboard was screwed into its trunk so the boys could play basketball. On the other side is the spot where a 4-foot-deep pool has been cemented over. Allen once tried a quasi-high dive into the water, only to catch the edge of the pool, leaving a scar on his knee that is visible today.

And yet, the real magic for the boys took place at the bottom of the driveway, around a line of trees and up a slight embankment. There, a field as big as any young boy's dream stretches 400 yards long and 100 yards wide. As a 5-year-old, Allen and Harris Jr. (who is a year younger) helped their parents and other siblings clear away rocks, tree roots and debris to create a wonderland that hosted family cookouts, classic-car shows and, most notably, spirited football games.

"This is where it all started," Allen says, a nostalgic smile creeping across his face.

He and Harris Jr. spent countless hours out back playing baseball and hide-and-seek. But mostly they played football, working daily to hone their skills. They perfected their spin moves by doing 360s around a tree; strengthened their legs and improved their balance by running routes in the snow; and sharpened their competitive edge by inviting over high school friends for pickup games. The most memorable featured 15 players to a side. There were no pads, no helmets, and no regard for personality safety. Participants walked away with bruised bodies and egos.

"We're competitive," Allen says, "Once somebody starts talking junk, we're trying to kill him the next play."

If Allen was devastating in the backyard, he was athletically lethal on high school fields, tallying an incredible 53 touchdowns as a senior. Before enrolling at Northern Guilford in Greensboro, which opened its doors prior to his junior year, he made one request of coach Johnny Roscoe: to stay on the field at all times. Roscoe assured him that would not be a problem. He knew he had a special talent in Allen, who could play quarterback, running back, receiver, linebacker, safety, returner, punter, place-holder and, when needed, kicker.

Asking the retired coach with the country drawl to choose his favorite Allen moment is like asking a parent to choose his or her favorite child. Roscoe chuckles and pauses, then mentions the game Northern won, 6-0, when a defensive back went high and appeared to intercept a pass, only to have Allen strip him of the ball before he landed and make his way into the end zone. He also mentions a game that took place several days after Allen's grandmother died. Allen was so emotional that Roscoe wondered how he would perform. Then he watched his star turn eight touches in the first half into five touchdowns, two on punt returns.

"Eventually their coach stopped punting to him," Roscoe says. "They would line up like for an extra point and just kick it out of bounds."

He also mentions a game in which quarterback Rocco Scarfone, one of Allen's best friends, threw a hitch pass near the goal line. When a defender came up and lowered his head for the tackle, Allen leapt over him and -- in mid-air -- struck a Heisman pose. "He was a showman," says Roscoe, who quickly points out that Allen was also a workaholic. He would study highlights of pro receivers and then stay long after practice to try to replicate the moves. When Roscoe would have the quarterbacks over to his home for film study early in the week, Allen would be sitting right there, as well, ensuring he was on the same page with them.

His dominance wasn't limited to offense. During a three-game stretch as a senior, he graded out above 60 at safety. The significance? In the nearly 25 years that Roscoe had utilized his grading scale, no player had ever scored that high in a single game. Rivals.com ranked Allen as the No. 1 safety in the country and the fifth-best prospect overall in the Class of 2010, and he was prepared to play defense in college -- until he participated in the U.S. Army All-American Bowl.

"I played all safety in the game, and it was just miserable watching the offense and not [being involved]," he says. "I was like, 'Nah, I can't do that.' I'd rather watch the defense get killed and me go off [on offense] than be on defense just waiting to make a play."

He initially committed to Alabama but switched to Cal after his older brother, Zach Maynard, a quarterback, transferred to Berkeley from Buffalo. The two are extremely close, along with middle brother Durel Lang. So tight that when Zach transferred to Cal, Keenan followed him, and cousin Maurice Harris Jr. came soon after.

The plan for Allen was to spend three years at Cal, then make the jump to the NFL as a first-round draft pick. Everything appeared to be on schedule after stellar freshman and sophomore seasons, but a knee injury caused him to miss the final three games of his junior year. He was not fully healed when pro scouts came around in the offseason, but he ran for them anyway, clocking a pedestrian 4.71-second 40-yard dash. Predictably, he fell out of the first round. Unpredictably, he lasted until the third round, where the then-San Diego Chargers selected him with the 76th overall pick.

It was humbling and embarrassing, as well as motivating. But would that translate into success on the next level?

Go to the Chargers' website and click on Allen's bio. Scroll down to his rookie season, and you will find highlights from every game that year, except the season opener against the Texans. There is no mention of it, because -- despite suiting up -- he did not play a single snap.

The guy who had always been the best player on his team -- if not the best player on the field -- the guy who requested to never come off the field in high school ... never saw it in his pro debut. Even worse, the Monday night game was in prime time on national television. The snub hurt and angered Allen. As he left Qualcomm Stadium in San Diego after the 31-28 loss to Houston, he was leaning toward quitting football to pursue a music career.

Singing has been a passion of his seemingly from the first time he heard a tune. He sang in the choir in high school and mastered the lyrics of Disney songs as efficiently as he mastered his playbook. He also loved instruments and taught himself to play the piano over a single weekend by watching YouTube tutorials.

"It was just like in football, where he would look at a route one or two times and then go out and run it," says Scarfone. "He would watch the tutorials a couple of times on a laptop upstairs, then run down to the living room in our house and copy it on our baby grand. He also loved to sing. I have hundreds of hours of him singing Chris Brown songs on my computer. He thinks he's a better singer than football player."

When Allen woke the morning after not playing, he was angrier than he had been when he went to bed. He got in his car and drove to the training facility but could not bring himself to go into the building. He picked up his phone and called his mom.

"I don't want to play no more," he told his mother. "They're not giving me my fair shot. I feel like I'm better than some of these guys, and [receivers coach Fred Graves is] not gonna play me. So, I'm done."

"No," she replied. "You've been working way too hard for this. This is where you want to be. This is what it is. You just gotta be patient and let God work."

He eventually decided to go inside the Chargers facility, and when Malcom Floyd went down with an injury on the Chargers' first play of the second half that week in Philadelphia, Allen finally had his chance, although he initially failed to realize just how significant the moment was. He thought Graves was going to put him in the slot, which meant he would only play in three-receiver sets. But Graves put him outside at the X, which meant he was assuming the role of No. 1 receiver for good.

"You're the guy," Graves said. "It's time to go."

"OK, bet," Allen said. "I'm ready to go."

Two plays later, with the Chargers facing a third-and-8 from their 22, Allen fought off tight coverage from veteran cornerback Cary Williams to make a diving catch for 18 yards. The play was noteworthy not only because of what happened during it, but also what took place after.

"I got up talking junk," Allen says.

The chatter is part of his game. "When I get out there, I'm confident, I'm comfortable, and I'm gonna let you know about it, too," he says.

Defensive backs might have a hard time believing this, but on a summer afternoon two months ago, Allen was at a loss for words. I asked him to pretend I was a cornerback lined up opposite him. What type of bold slander would he direct at me?

Allen leaned back on an oversized couch and, as he often does, silently stroked his beard. He seemed slightly embarrassed.

"That's the thing, we gotta be on the field for that," he said. "It just comes then, because that's Slayer talking. That's the alter ego I can just tap in to. But I'm not like that off the field."

Out of uniform, he is a man of limited words around those he doesn't know. He often will act like he's not paying attention, but he's taking in everything. Teammates did not know how to read him when he first joined the team. Ditto some coaches who mistook his persona for indifference or a lack of love for football.

"If you're just meeting him and have 30 minutes with him, the first 10 are going to be like talking to the wall," says former major league pitcher and baseball executive Dave Stewart, whose son and nephew are good friends with Allen. "After that, after he gets a feel for who you are, if he's comfortable with you, he's going to show you who he is. He will fill the room with laughter."

Says Scarfone: "He's a guy who'll do things for you even if it makes him uncomfortable. In high school, my little cousin went to school with us, and she was infatuated with Keenan. He was a senior; she was a freshman. He was the BMOC; and, again, she was a freshman. Well, my aunt had this idea about having him pop out of a cake and sing Happy Birthday to her because he loved to sing. I knew it would make him uncomfortable; he was pretty reserved at the time. But he agreed, got there early and hid in the cake. Then he popped out and started singing to her. It made her year."

Now 26, Allen spends most of his time away from the field with his two young daughters and fiancée, who is expecting their third child. Family is everything to him. He grew up surrounded by enough aunts, uncles and cousins to fill entire bleacher sections on Friday nights in the fall.

When he needs an escape, he finds it in music. He had not played the piano in a while this past summer when he took a seat behind the baby grand in Scarfone's home. He rubbed his hands together, stretched his fingers and then found his comfort zone by playing Beethoven's "Für Elise."

"Music puts me in a happy place," he says. "I don't know why, but I could go to the bathroom, go take a shower, and just sing my life away; be in there for a whole 16 songs and be comfortable. The harmony in a choir is so beautiful."

In many ways, he is a young man with an old soul. He will listen to rap and hip hop, but his genre of choice is R&B. The mellower, the better. Check his playlist before games and you're likely to find Usher, Tank and Chris Brown, not necessarily something befitting someone who goes by Slayer.

"It's just the calm before the storm," he says. "I don't get juiced up by the rap. I just can't do it. It's too much yelling and too much screaming. I'd rather just have my cool little vibe."

But once the game starts, mellow gives way to mania. It's the competition that drives him, the opportunity to test his best against yours. His footwork is among the best in the game, allowing him to keep defensive backs guessing and to get in and out of cuts before an opponent can react. He is about quick bursts, not long speed.

"He can juke out somebody in a phone booth," Scarfone says.

Future Hall of Fame receiver Larry Fitzgerald was among the players that Allen used to study while in high school. Now it is Fitzgerald who takes note of his younger counterpart.

"I have watched him closely since coming out of Cal," the Cardinals star says. "I was always impressed by how well he moves for a man his size. He's virtually unstoppable versus press coverage, with his ability to change direction at the line of scrimmage. He gets in and out of his breaks with wonderful precision. He can high point the ball in 50/50 situations and can make plays with his feet once the ball is in his hands after the catch."

Allen contends we have seen only half of what he has to offer. This was the first offseason since the offseason following his rookie year that he did not have to rehab some sort of injury, and he took advantage by focusing on details, like using his footwork to beat press coverage off the line or making each of his routes look the same to cornerbacks. Trainer Steve Calhoun regularly put him through drills to simulate every movement he might need to make in a route, all the better to make it second nature once the game begins.

He does the mental work Monday through Saturday so he can let his body take over on Sunday. "Once I touch the football field, I don't feel like I can be touched, and it just comes from the repetition of me putting in the work," he says. "When I play, it's just instinct. I don't have to think too much, I'm just out there playing my game."

Allen entered the season as one of only six players to average at least six catches and 70 yards receiving (minimum 100 receptions) since 2013 -- averages he has almost identically maintained through the early portion of the current season, despite an off game on Sunday (three catches, 44 yards) against the hometown-rival Rams. The others were Brown, Jones, Odell Beckham Jr., Michael Thomas and Demaryius Thomas. On the one hand, it's a compliment, because he is in elite company; on the other, it is an affront, because he is surrounded by others. That never sits well with a man who wants to stand alone.

"Keenan is his own man," says Maynard. "Everybody has his own legacy, and his was destined to be football. It's been that way since an early age. He's just been gifted. He's special. From the moment our dad told him it's a man's sport, Keenan has been Keenan. The Slayer. That will be his legacy."

24 Hours ... With Melvin Gordon on Game Day

*By Robert Klemko

IRVINE, Calif. — The first thing you notice when Melvin Gordon III emerges from his hotel room at the Marriott here in Orange County, where the Chargers stay on the night before home games, is the fan. It's 8:10 a.m. Gordon's Chargers and the 49ers are kicking off in a little more than five hours, and the Pro Bowl running back is lugging a hefty black electric fan with his overnight bag. "I can't sleep without it," he says. That goes back to his college days at Wisconsin, where he was a Heisman runner-up in 2014, before becoming the 15th overall pick in the 2015 draft.

Over his first two seasons Gordon established himself as one of the premier backs in the NFL. Then the Chargers moved north, to Costa Mesa for practice, and to Carson, Calif., in the south

Los Angeles suburbs, for games. Each of those game-day trips to Carson, 30-some miles up the 405, in somehow heavy traffic for a Sunday morning, is the beginning of what Gordon considers—potentially—his final day in the NFL. "You've gotta put your best foot forward because you never know if it's gonna be your last one," he says as he waits for a valet driver to return his Range Rover to the Marriott driveway. "Can't have no regrets."

Leave nothing to chance (or as little as possible). That means following roughly the same routine every Sunday and leaving ample time for thorough pregame preparation. Like a number of NFL players on a game weekend, Gordon is all about ritual. This is his.

Saturday, September 29 8 p.m. PT

Gordon spends the evening after dinner cramming for tomorrow's test. On film he reviews his blocking assignments, the rushing plays he'll carry out, and the facet of the game that sets him apart: the route-running. Only four running backs in the NFL have more catches this season than Gordon (28 in five games), and he leads the field in yards per catch (9.3). Saturday nights are for visualization: "The night before you kind of see yourself being in that moment, and then when you wake up you get into that zone," he says. "Everything from that point is really a buildup to that first play."

Sunday 8:15 a.m.

Gordon eats a quick and quiet breakfast with a handful of teammates at the hotel, then gets in his car to drive home, to a high-rise apartment where his father is waiting. Like his son, Melvin Gordon II has his hair twisted in tightly-coiled dreadlocks and wrapped in a bun high and to the right, and like his son he wears a gold chain around his neck. He's quick to remind Melvin III where the talent comes from. Big Bo, as he's nicknamed, is especially proud today.

"You know, when you play football that's not really you out there," says Big Bo.

"Who is it?" replies Lil Bo, knowing the answer before his father says it.

"That's me," Big Bo says. "You just borrowin' me real quick."

"You sound crazy right now," Lil Bo says.

Father and son exchange game tickets and hugs, and Gordon is on the road to Carson. Soon enough, traffic slows to a crawl, and Gordon begins to calculate just how much of his game day he spends in his Range Rover. It's a time for meditation, to get lost in the hip hop bellowing through the speakers—it's not a time for brake lights. "I don't really like this area too much, to be honest. I loved San Diego. It was my kind of energy, my kind of vibe. It was a perfect place for me. Everything was perfect."

His father and mother moved here, from Wisconsin to the maze of highways and commercial parks 40 minutes south of L.A. proper, to be closer to Melvin. They don't much like the area either. Still, having mom and dad nearby is something of an emotional anchor for the 25-year-old from Kenosha. Both had been integral in his day-to-day upbringing through high school, with dad playing a critical role in his son decommitting from Iowa and attending Wisconsin. (Melvin III says his father didn't talk to him for two weeks when he made his initial decision, though he spoke with the coaches at Wisconsin daily.)

A year and some change into Melvin's time at Wisconsin, in March 2012, his father was sentenced to 10 years in prison for cocaine trafficking. He wound up serving nearly five years, and was released in December 2016, finally able to see his son play football again, in the flesh. Gordon, when interviewed last year about his father's return, expressed no ill will; he was grateful for his father providing for the family. "When my dad got out of jail it felt good to have him there," Melvin says. "It was like old times. It's good to know that you've got both parents there supporting you, when that's how it was at the start."

Melvin's grandfather was responsible for fathering 28 children, the Gordons say, which meant Melvin was part of a small army of cousins, most of them outstanding youth athletes in Wisconsin and Illinois. Only Melvin, though, in the middle of the pack in terms of age, made it to Division I athletics. "Whether it was girls or partying or whatever, they got kind of sidetracked, so I separated myself, because I knew this was my way out," he says. "I tell my younger cousins, it's easy to get sidetracked. I tell my little cousins, you've got to be mentally tough. What you're going through now is nothing compared to what you're going to experience in the league. I just didn't want to struggle, man."

10:10 a.m. StubHub Center Carson, Calif.

This is typically earlier than Gordon arrives for a 1:25 p.m. start, but a week earlier he showed up at this time for the Rams game and went for 80 yards and a touchdown on 15 carries. So he's rolling with the change of pace. A golf cart brings him from his car to a security checkpoint about 75 yards away, where they inspect his black leather satchel and wave a wand up and down his all-black slacks and form-fitting tucked-in tee combo. He'll pull a Wisconsin Badgers visor out of the satchel and wear it for pregame warmups, eliciting a promise of a fine from an NFL uniform inspector standing by. The visor is lucky for him, though, and Gordon keeps it on. Another ritual: Gordon goes through his receiving route tree alone, with Chargers assistant Mark Ridgley throwing him the ball. Ridgley moved from running backs to the offensive line this season, but the tradition begun last season remains.

After the fighter jet flyover and the national anthem, it's time for football. Bo, Carmen (Melvin's mom) and Kenzel Doe, a former Wisconsin teammate and one of Melvin's closest friends, settle into a small luxury box with their hosts, Melvin Ingram's mother, wife and son. Ingram, the Pro Bowl defensive end, was the first to take Gordon under his wing when he entered the league. While the others sit in the stadium seats outside the box, Big Bo sits inside, across from the catered stack of mini bacon cheeseburgers and hot dogs, and pulls out his phone. In videos that won't soon be deleted, 10-year-old Melvin weaves between would-be tacklers on his way to the end zone, ill-fitting shoulder and hip pads flapping all around him.

Bo isn't keen on talking about his time in prisons in Illinois and Minnesota and the consequences of his conviction; he'd like to leave those stories in the past, or otherwise save them for his nascent book idea.

"I did my time and came home to something beautiful," he says. "Everybody makes mistakes in life. Nobody's perfect, so I'm leaving the bad behind. It still seems like a dream, because it takes a lot of work to get here. It doesn't happen for everybody. My son is the only one who made it through, because me and my wife exposed him to the right things at the right time. It's not just about being good. It's about getting noticed and getting your kid out there for the world to see."

1:30 p.m.

The Niners get the scoring started with a pick-six by Antone Exum Jr., who jumps on an overthrown ball in the flat and takes Philip Rivers' pass 32 yards for the score. Late in the second quarter, down 17-12 after a missed extra point, Chargers coach Anthony Lynn chooses to go for two. Rivers in the huddle changes up the play call, amending a Gordon diagonal route to Rivers' right to a sprint to the left flat. Gordon makes the catch, makes a man miss with an inside cut at the 1 and is in standing for the conversion.

"Phil freestyled that," Gordon says later. "I was supposed to run a whole different route. Phil moved me to the left side and said, 'Just run a swing.' He does that every once in a while. That's why he's fire."

After being contained in the first half, Gordon lights up the second, dodging, bruising and spinning his way to one of the most impressive 13-yard runs you'll ever see, three plays into Los Angeles' first possession of the third quarter. Three plays later on 3rd-and-four from the Niners 6, Gordon splits out wide, and takes Rivers' pass in for a touchdown to put the Chargers up 23-17. On the next drive, with the Chargers at the San Francisco 10, Rivers finds Gordon again in the right flat, but this time Gordon spins into contact and fumbles, only his second since 2017. Though the Chargers retain possession, Gordon still owes $300 in cash to his position room for a fumble in the red zone. "I can't believe I fumbled," he says later. "I'm so pissed about that."

4:25 p.m.

Up 29-27 with 6:50 left and the ball at midfield, Rivers hands to Gordon on a perfectly blocked counter right that sends Gordon sprinting down the home sideline. At 11 yards, Niners linebacker Fred Warner meets him with a hard shoulder that delivers a shock through Gordon's left shoulder. Someone on the sideline notices Gordon grimacing in pain from the stinger and brings him to the medical tent on the sideline, out of the public view.

"They tested me for a concussion," Gordon says. "What game did you play? Who did you play? Did you win? I'm like man, if you don't undo this strap so I can loosen this shoulder up ..."

"It's just a little stinger. Get 'em every once in a while if you get hit in the right spot. Just shake it off, take a couple plays off. I was just hoping ain't nothing bad happened, because I didn't get to finish the drive. Those are the types of games where the team needs you to finish, so I was a little upset about that, but I have faith in Austin."

Austin Ekeler, Gordon's backup, doesn't get the first down three plays later on third and 2, but Gordon doesn't need to wait long to see if his absence might have changed the outcome; Niners QB C.J. Beathard throws an interception three plays into the would-be game winning drive. The Chargers win improves their record to 2-2 heading into Week 5.

In the locker room, Gordon is one of the players surrounded by a media scrum, with print and television reporters jockeying for position. With a season-high 104 yards on the ground and a receiving touchdown, Gordon's a hot commodity.

Talk about your whole game.

Talk about your play as a receiver this season.

Speak of the grit of this team.

Gordon talks about all of it: "We can't wait for something bad to happen to be special. We've got to come out the gate like that."

5:15 p.m.

It's time for Mom's debrief, and Carmen Gordon wants to know why her son keeps trying to hurdle opponents. "Why do you keep going up like that?! You scare me," she says. "How do you feel? Do your knees hurt?"

"You had a good game, hear? I'm proud of you!"

He's fine, he assures her, but he doesn't plan on driving home. He reveals that he changed his shoes at halftime, from a newer model to the sort he wore at Wisconsin when he rushed for 29 touchdowns as a senior: "Had to put on the thunderbirds!" he exclaims to laughter from the group.

Doe takes the wheel while Melvin sits in the front seat and pulls up Twitter. Before long he's searched his own name and is scrolling through the top results. He says he only does this when he's played well. "Good games only," he says. "It's just funny what people say about fantasy."

Next, results from around the league.

"Zeke [Elliott] went crazy today."

"134 and three tuddies? Alvin Kamara going crazy. Makes my game look weak."

"Saints ain't jokin'! They're low-key nice."

"Christian McCaffrey went for 184," Gordon continues.

"184?" Doe asks.

"One-eighty-FOE," Gordon stresses. "Not playin' no games."

"Sony Michel had 112 and a touchdown. They said we're not finna' be 1-3, not with Tom Brady."

Khalil Mack, Gordon says, notched yet another strip sack for the Bears after being traded by the Raiders, out of the AFC West. "This man crazy, bro," Gordon says of Mack. "I'm so happy he's gone. Get him outta here, bruh."

6:45 p.m.

The NFL news consumption doesn't stop; now back at the apartment, Gordon turns on the television to see Adam Schefter discussing

Le'Veon Bell's ongoing contract discord in Pittsburgh, and what it could cost for another team to fetch Bell in a trade. Over Chinese takeout picked up by mom and dad, Bo asks Melvin if he thinks Bell is coming back to play under his current deal. "No," Gordon says. Bo asks: "You think he's gonna stay out for a year?"

"Yes, sir," Melvin says. "And I would too. Come back and get hurt—why? Gave up everything he had for five, six years, and y'all can't pay the man?"

(Gordon's own rookie contract was four years and $10.67 million. Last spring the Chargers picked up his fifth-year option, and he's scheduled to make $5.6 million in 2019.)

7:50 p.m.

The Chargers' digital staff uploads the all-22 film from the game, accessible on every player's tablet, about two days before NFL Game Pass subscribers have access. Gordon, who has been refreshing the upload feed while eating and watching Sunday night Ravens-Steelers game, takes a seat at the kitchen island and huddles with his father to watch the film. The viewing session is full of self-critiques, visions of yards left on the field and could-have-been big plays. "Oh my gosh, I wanted to take an inside move on him, and I thought, he's playing me to protect the inside!" Gordon yells. "I was too far outside of him."

He plops down on the coach, with Mom, Dad and Kenzel. There were visions of a late-night trip to meet teammates at a nightclub in Los Angeles, but those plans were scrapped when the leg soreness kicked in. They'll watch the Sunday night game, with doses of nuanced commentary from Carmen ("Flacco stay trippin'!"). Before Gordon puts compression sleeves on his legs to keep any swelling down, he remarks at how silly it must look, the whole family stuffed onto one couch in a spacious apartment. Says Carmen, "That's who we are, though."

Chargers' Melvin Gordon, Austin Ekeler flip the script on running back tandems

The Athletic

The first play was a pass to running back Austin Ekeler, the second was a run for him. Melvin Gordon rushed once, then again and, after a quick throw to Mike Williams to convert a third down, the Chargers went back to Gordon, who rushed 20 yards for a touchdown. Between that drive and the next, Los Angeles went to its two-headed monster out of the backfield on nine of 11 plays.

Against the Buffalo Bills last Sunday, the Chargers put the smaller, speedier Ekeler in space with jet sweeps and end-arounds and passes in the flat. With the bigger, bulkier Gordon, they gave him more one-on-one opportunities, power runs between the tackles and delay routes out of the backfield.

A few days earlier, running backs coach Alfredo Roberts said the team favors Gordon in running situations and Ekeler in passing situations, but that they want to sometimes flip that philosophy to prevent defenses from reading plays with personnel tells. In Buffalo, the Chargers committed to the role reversal. Ekeler led the team in carries (11) and Gordon finished tied for the lead in catches (six).

That split speaks to the Chargers' confidence in their two Swiss Army knives and their attitude toward how they're used.

"We love that both guys are able to be productive," Roberts said. "They strive to be complete [backs], but the [situational needs of the] game kind of forces them to [play differently every week]. The game picks them."

By the end of the win over the Bills, Ekeler or Gordon had gotten the ball on 30 of 56 plays (54 percent), not too far off from their usage in the season opener against Kansas City (46 percent). Coach Anthony Lynn, a six-year NFL running back, was skeptical the deployment of running backs as all-around offensive threats was a league-wide trend — "It could be game-to-game," he said — but he emphasized to the players that they shouldn't view their workloads in carries or catches. Think touches, he said.

Now, Lynn and the Chargers (1-1) need to devise ways to utilize Gordon and Ekeler against the stout defense of the Rams (2-0) at the Coliseum on Sunday.

"Those two running backs they have, certainly both of them together, I think have over 200 yards per game," Rams defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said. "... We've got a big challenge [ahead of us]."

Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers thinks the versatility of Gordon and Ekeler makes them especially difficult for defenses to prepare for them.

"I'm telling you," he said after the Buffalo game. "The two of these guys, they can be [something else]. They're dynamic guys. The way they catch it, run it, and the way that they're different. They're not the same. ... There's no telling how many plays we can run with those two on the field together."

Lynn likes the running back tandem because of their diverse skill sets and his luxury to keep a fresh runner on the field and not "wear one guy out." Offensive coordinator Ken Whisenhunt likes it because of the way defenses are challenged, which he saw the rewards of Sunday when an early play-action fake resulted in a long pass to tight end Virgil Green. From then on, play action often froze the Buffalo linebacking corps. Roberts, the man coaching the tandem every day, started working with running backs last year for the first time since 1999, when he was on the first staff at Florida Atlantic. A five-year NFL tight end starting in the late 80s, Roberts coached the position he played for 15 years until he switched to running backs in a reunion with Lynn, whom he first worked with in Jacksonville and from whom he learned the intricacies of running back. Roberts' position meeting vibe is lax — "I don't want to scream at a guy unless I'm really trying to get your attention," he said — but it's also focused. He knows what he has in the pair of backs. Ekeler, a former undrafted free agent, entered this season intent on expanding and solidifying his role; Gordon, in a contract year, prioritized injury prevention in his training regiment this offseason.

"We know Melvin's the leader," Roberts said. "And we understand Austin's a young, up-and-coming player who is beginning to have a major role."

To maximize their potential, Roberts established goals this season that, after ball security (which tops every list), emphasized improving their moves in space and extending their runs. To gets reps for the latter, Roberts had his players juke the bag, throw stiff-arms and lower their shoulders.

"We can get what's blocked," Roberts remembered telling them. "We can get the two or three [yards] after contact. But what happens when we're in space, or what happens when we find ourselves in a 1-on-1 situation? Can we win that matchup?"

Ekeler said the entire unit practices evasion in space while using "whatever moves work," and then the group reviews the tape afterward. The running backs bounce ideas off each other about how to break down different defenders approaching from different angles. The other day on tape, Ekeler watched as, on screen, he ran at two approaching defenders and made a note that he might try something different than trying to run them over next time.

In the Week 1 matchup with Kansas City, Gordon and Ekeler emerged as a one-two punch. Even though the Chargers lost, they moved the ball steadily when it was in either of their hands. When asked about the complementary nature after the game, Gordon grinned.

"We've been doing it all camp," he said, "and that's what we're going to continue to do."

The pair chopped up the Bills defense together and the buzz about them grew. They certainly caught Phillips' attention.

Recently in the locker room, as Ekeler sat at his stall, Gordon appeared in a towel. "What's our name?" Gordon jokingly asked Ekeler.

"Our name?" Ekeler replied.

"Come up with one," Gordon said laughing, and Ekeler shook his head. The two have been linked so closely because they're different but similarly effective, and people were starting to catch on. Ekeler couldn't think of one right away, but he seemed to buy Gordon's thinking.

"All right," Ekeler said, "I guess we have to get a duo name."

'A linebacker in a kicker's body' — How Mike Badgley made the Chargers believe in kicking again

*By Sam Fortier
The Athletic
January 2, 2019*

After the last kick of practice, Mike Badgley wanted another.

It was the Thursday before the Chargers' Week 13 game in Pittsburgh and, because the team's practice fields needed a break, the team was working out a few minutes down the road at Orange Coast College. Badgley had just drilled a field goal from 50-something yards, but now he wanted to try one from 60. The rookie said the longest kick he has ever made was from 70 yards, but that happened while he was messing around with friends. Badgley had never put a ball through the uprights from as far as 60 in a game.

Players, coaches and general manager Tom Telesco stopped to watch. For the last three years, missed kicks defined the Chargers. Last season, the errant attempts probably cost the franchise a playoff berth. When this season began, the Chargers thought they had found their solution in Caleb Sturgis, only to cut him after six games because he sent eight of his last 16 kicks wide.

Yet teammates swore none of Badgley's predecessors possessed as much self-confidence as this kid who spoke in a loud, New Jersey-salted accent. He built relationships with everyone, including offensive linemen who had never hung out with a kicker before, and he did not back down from any kick. On the sideline during games, Badgley asked head coach Anthony Lynn for chances to try field goals beyond what the coach believed was in his range.

"He's got that savage mentality you don't think about in a specialist," defensive lineman Isaac Rochell said. "When the game comes down to a field goal, (he is) a guy who says, 'Yeah, I'm not even worried about this. I can make this 10 times out of 10.'"

That day at OCC, the extra eyes did not faze the man who teammates nicknamed "The Money Badger." He lined up, shrugged his shoulders and saw punter/holder Donnie Jones signal for the snap. One, two steps. Right leg hammer through. The ball sailed up and then down, down, down, through the goal posts. The field erupted with cheers, partly because he made the kick but also, some admitted afterward, because he asked for it in the first place.

Three days later, inside a tight visitors locker room at Heinz Field, a group of reporters crowded around Badgley. Minutes earlier, on Sunday Night Football, he had kicked a game-winning, 29-yard field goal to complete the greatest comeback at Pittsburgh in league history. It was the Chargers' first statement win of the season and the strangest ending to a game Badgley could remember. The Steelers jumped offsides three straight times, negating a miss and a block before he secured a 33-30 victory.

The extra attention did not faze Badgley, but one of the questions did: Did you think about the history of Chargers kickers struggling in those moments? He furrowed his brow.

"No," Badgley said curtly. "I was thinking about winning the game. Why would I think about that? I would never think about that."

This was the mental makeup that impressed Jones and long snapper Mike Windt at the kicker workout the Chargers conducted after a Week 5 win over Oakland when Caleb Sturgis strained his right quad. The injury was a frustrating development for the Chargers, who, wary of continued kicker instability, responded to Sturgis' early misses by cutting punter/holder Drew Kaser just six days earlier. They brought in Jones partly because he held for Sturgis in Philadelphia, but now they had to find a new kicker anyway.

Searching for a stopgap, the Chargers brought in Roberto Aguayo, a former second-round pick who hit all nine kicks when the Chargers pit him against Sturgis in the preseason; Daniel Carlson, the first kicker drafted in 2018 who Minnesota cut after two games because he missed three crunch-time field goals; and Badgley, the unknown rookie out of Miami who made all five preseason field goals with Indianapolis.

“From the start of the workout ... from the way he struck the ball, he was hands-down the best guy,” Jones said of Badgley.

The next day, the Chargers signed Badgley, and the kicking unit scrambled to prepare for the upcoming road trip to Cleveland and London. Jones found that Badgley and Sturgis approached the ball differently but liked their kicks held similarly, with the ball tilted forward just a little and angled slightly left or right depending on the wind. In Badgley’s NFL debut, against the Browns, he decided to have a tilt to the right as he walked out for an extra point, the first kick of his career.

About 450 miles east, in Badgley’s hometown of Summit, N.J., two of his high school coaches, Kevin Kostibos and John Liberato, followed closely on TV. They watched him line up and then, a second or two before the snap, his shoulders rose and fell. They couldn’t believe it — “The Summit Shrug” in the NFL.

“Once you get the shrug, you’re good,” Liberato laughed. “He’s been doing that since seventh grade.”

The kick spun in and, as the afternoon wore on, the Chargers discovered what Kostibos and Liberato already knew, what made Badgley spurn the one-inch tee allowed by the New Jersey State Interscholastic Athletic Association and kick off the ground with a holder in high school. The kid was certain he would hit every kick.

In that game against the Browns, he did, nailing four more extra points and a 44-yard field goal. Later, Lynn would say Badgley just didn’t act like a kicker — no disrespect — and the Summit coaches understood. As a senior in high school, Badgley kicked but also played quarterback, free safety, running back, receiver and punter. He returned kicks and punts, too.

In their first preseason scrimmage every year, Kostibos said, Summit runs a fake on its first extra point. When Badgley was a junior, he pantomimed the kick and then launched himself at the defender coming off the edge.

“He drilled that kid,” Kostibos remembered.

The block was effective, but Kostibos felt conflicted. He wanted to protect his best player without robbing him of the physicality he brought to every position. Badgley lobbied to change the blocking assignments so he could hit. Someone needed to stop the edge rusher, Kostibos thought. The coach relented and changed the play. Badgley continued crunching pads.

“How many kickers want to hit somebody?” Kostibos said laughing. “With Mike, you’re dealing with a linebacker in a kicker’s body.”

In London, against the Titans, Badgley made a pair of field goals and extra points. But after the bye week, Sturgis healed and Badgley got cut.

It was hard to move on from Sturgis and his two-year, $2.25 million contract, and Lynn still believed Sturgis could become the kicker he thought Sturgis was, the one who graded highest in his “critical kick percentage” metric, which accounted for kicks in one-score games, with less than two minutes left in the half and with less than two minutes left in the game. However, Badgley cleared waivers and, for insurance, the Chargers stashed him on their practice squad.

In Sturgis’ first game back, he missed two extra points and a field goal, and the Chargers needed a last-second defensive stand to escape Seattle with a win. Players grumbled they wouldn’t have needed heroics if Sturgis did his job. The next morning, the Chargers cut Sturgis and promoted Badgley, their seventh kicker since 2016 and the most for any team in the NFL during that span.

“It was very frustrating,” Telesco said of the kicking situation. “We worked hard at it, but obviously the choices we made were not the correct choices. Sometimes it was our fault. Sometimes it was the circumstances. But the end product wasn’t good enough.

“Michael has come in and done an excellent job. He’s been consistent for us and, mentally, very strong.”

Telesco quickly pointed out that Badgley, like everyone, will be judged by his next game. But the GM noted that the team has been different since the permanent switch. Though, as early as the Cleveland game, Telesco noticed an increased confidence among the players when Badgley kicked.

Jones was the first one to believe Badgley might be different from the other kickers. The more they practiced together, the more Badgley’s ability to get over a miss reminded Jones of kickers he had held for before, like Olindo Mare, Jeff Wilkins and Shayne Graham, all of whom played in the league for at least 13 years.

In Pittsburgh, Jones saw Badgley go through it in a game for the first time after he pushed a 52-yarder wide left. Jones remembered telling him, “You got to stay in it,” and Badgley just nodding. Three hours later, Badgley missed his first attempt at the game-winner. “Stay in it,” Jones said. Badgley knocked in his third try.

“Young kid, rookie, 23 years old, on the road here, hard place to kick?” Jones said afterward, shaking his head. “I’m so happy, man. I’m proud of him.”

One week later, Badgley made all four of his field goals, including a franchise-record 59-yarder, to help the Chargers slide by the Bengals. Before those wins over Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, the Chargers and their fans understood an unreliable kicker capped the season’s potential, but now they saw Badgley’s consistency and confidence hold up under pressure. For many in the organization, those two performances transformed the season.

Running back Austin Ekeler regained faith the Chargers could finish a drive with points, even if they didn’t convert on third down in opposing territory. Lynn thought less often about going for it on fourth down inside the 50-yard-line. Running back Melvin Gordon saw a clearer path toward the Super Bowl and spoke to Badgley one-on-one.

“I told him ... ‘You’re changing the ball game for us,’ ” Gordon said. “I just let him know that I appreciated what he did.”

Standing on the sideline late in the fourth quarter, Badgley understood why Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City had a fearsome reputation around the league. Seventy-six thousand fans thundered around him. They became louder, more frantic as the Chargers offense drove down the field. Badgley stayed busy, kicking into the sideline net.

Line it up. Summit Shrug. One, two steps. Right leg hammer through.

This, in Week 15, surpassed Pittsburgh as the Chargers’ most important game of the season. They needed to overcome traveling woes and playing on a short week on national television to snap a nine-game losing streak to the rival Chiefs and remain in contention for the AFC West title. Lose and the division was lost. Arrowhead grew louder as the offense neared the end zone but hushed when the Chargers scored.

Badgley rushed toward the field. He wanted to kick. He had made all three extra points. The environment was as close as he could get to preparing for the playoffs. Then he saw Lynn put up two fingers. The Chargers were going for the two-point conversion and the win. Badgley didn’t mind. It was the smart decision, statistically, he said. Still, he wanted to be on the field.

From the sideline, Badgley watched the Chargers convert the two-point attempt. He waded into the bedlam on the field. He praised his teammates’ resiliency and execution. Next time, though, he wanted to be part of the season’s biggest play.

“I was ready,” he said.

Since then, though, Badgley has not found a kick that would’ve been as important as the one he never got to try. He knows he will, though, because the playoffs are coming. To prepare, at practice and on the sideline during games, Badgley continues to follow the same routine that teammates and fans believe in.

Line it up. Summit Shrug. One, two steps. Right leg hammer through.

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- Los Angeles Chargers coach Anthony Lynn saw something special when Michael Davis joined the team last year during an offseason workout as an undrafted rookie out of BYU.

Fast forward to a year later and with Trevor Williams dealing with a nagging knee issue, and Davis has become the newest member of the self-proclaimed "Jack Boys," starting opposite Pro Bowler Casey Hayward.

"He just needed reps," Lynn said. "He has the size, the speed and he's playing more physical. I like what I'm seeing from Michael right now."

Teams have targeted the inexperienced Davis, but he has held up. Davis has recorded 23 tackles, two pass breakups and a forced fumble in three starts this season. He also has four tackles on special teams.

At 6-foot-2 and 195 pounds, Davis caught the eyes of Chargers' scouts by running an impressive 4.34-second, 40-yard time at his pro day last year.

With his size and that type of speed, the former receiver showed that he had the physical tools needed to thrive in defensive coordinator Gus Bradley's system as a press corner.

But early on things did not go well. Davis gave up five receptions on go routes for 144 receiving yards in a preseason game last year against the Seattle Seahawks.

"He would try to tackle, but I think that's what held him back from being a guy that we felt like could get on the field consistently," Bradley said. "To his credit, I think he identified that was his weakness and really attacked it."

Davis played in just 35 defensive snaps during his rookie season. He did earn a regular role on special teams, finishing third on the team with 15 tackles on special teams last year.

"My rookie year I struggled," Davis said. "I was under a lot of stress and I didn't have a lot of confidence. But then coming out this year with this being my second year, I have a lot more confidence now."

Davis developed more swagger in his game by getting stronger, allowing him to play more physical in the back end defensively. Davis attacked his lack of physicality by taking a wrestling class twice a week during the offseason to improve his ability to play with better leverage.

"It helps with tackling, when I need to get close with a low center of gravity," Davis told the Orange County Register.

Chargers defensive backs coach Ron Milus, who took on Davis as a project, has noticed the difference -- although he wasn't aware of his wrestling classes.

"I think someone may have said that too me, but it really never came up in our room," Milus laughed, when asked about Davis wrestling. "All I know is he's doing a much better job on that part of the game."

Milus said he first noticed Davis in a joint scrimmage with the Los Angeles Rams last year during training camp, when the BYU product made a handful of plays in coverage.

"From that point on he's just kind of gotten better and better," Milus said. "He didn't get a lot of snaps last year on the defensive side, but he's taking advantage of what he's getting now."

"I think if you were looking to draw up a corner for this level, you would probably look at Michael's dimensions and say, 'You know what, that's probably what we're looking for. The size, the speed and the ability to catch up -- that's what he brings to the table. And he's gotten to be a pretty dependable tackler, too. So that part he's really improved on."

Milus said Davis is playing with more confidence due to an improved knowledge of defense. Now, Davis has to prove over the long haul that he has the mental toughness and playmaking skills to stick as a full-time starter.

"If you don't have confidence you can't play defense -- you can't play any position to be honest," Davis said. "So just being out there with the boys I'm able to boost my confidence. And when I'm making plays in practice, I'm obviously able to do that on game days as well."

Chargers playmaker Mike Williams seeks (and flashes) greatness

*By Jim Trotter

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- It is midweek during training camp. The Los Angeles Chargers are nearing the end of a practice at which many veteran starters have been given the day off. That means extra reps for those on the field. The heat is not oppressive, but it's enough to get your attention. Bodies are tired. Legs are heavy. Concentration is waning. Then Mike Williams does something that makes you forget all of that.

The second-year wide receiver tracks a pass down the sideline, soars over a cornerback who is in tight coverage and snares the ball at its highest point, leaving the defender to look helpless as Williams strides for the end zone. It is not the first time teammates have seen this movie, but the ending never gets old. They know they are seeing something special, a 6-foot-4, 220-pound talent who can beat you with his physicality, speed or athleticism -- sometimes all on the same play. The only person not impressed is Williams, who says he won't be satisfied until he's doing it in games as well as practice.

Three days later, in the Chargers' preseason game against the Seahawks, a defender has tight coverage on Williams in the corner of the end zone when Geno Smith lofts a pass high in that direction. And just as he had done in the practice, Williams soars to high-point the ball for a touchdown. Los Angeles' sideline is so excited that even defenders run to the end zone to celebrate with Williams, who suddenly appears poised to make good on the promise that led the Bolts to select him with the seventh overall pick in last year's draft.

The desire to excel was there a year ago, but back and knee injuries contributed to Williams spending more time in the training room than in the huddle. At times, he felt like an outsider in his own home, like he was in detention while everyone else was at recess. It stunted his development and contributed to him catching only 11 passes total. It also caused some fans to wonder if the Chargers had made a mistake in drafting him.

Now healthy, Williams' stock is soaring like his leap in the end zone. He made a difficult catch appear so easy that minds immediately raced with thoughts of what could be, and how the Chargers could have one of the largest and most talented receiver groups in the NFL. Williams joins 6-foot-2 Pro Bowler Keenan Allen and 6-4 threat Tyrell Williams. While each is talented in his own right, Williams' ability to effectively run every route with his combination of size, athleticism and speed draws your attention.

"I was watching Mike walk out here the other day -- I was behind him -- and I would have thought it was a speed-rush defensive end," coach Anthony Lynn says. "He's a big man when you get those pads on, and he's going to be another viable option for us. We've got Keenan, but people can double him. They can go double-double on the outside, so you're going to need another big target. I think Mike can do that. We may be in more three-wide receiver sets if he keeps coming. Right now, we're putting him in situations to make plays and he keeps making them."

A lot of credit goes to Williams himself, but an ample share belongs to receivers coach Phil McGeoghan, who has the delicate job of breaking down a high-profile young star while simultaneously building him up. McGeoghan had to bring him through the emotional strains of a difficult rookie season. He had to be firm yet gentle, demanding yet understanding. He had to keep Williams up when he might be down. That required the two of them wanting and striving for the same thing.

"When you're young, you're very defensive and a little bit entitled when you come in," McGeoghan says. "You have to tear those defense mechanisms down while building their confidence up. It's a hard thing to do for a young football player to be a really good teammate, to drop his defenses, to allow you to coach him hard but understand it's coming from a place of love. Sometimes you have to do a lot of correction initially, and until they have the right mindset and accept the coaching and aren't defensive and don't think you're just trying to tear them down without a purpose, it can be tough." One way McGeoghan builds trust is through long conversations in the cool of a meeting room rather than the heat of the practice field. He tries to learn about each player's background and goals. He wants to know the triggers that allow him to push them in times of adversity. With Williams, the trigger was greatness.

"He said to me he wants to be great. He said that, not me," McGeoghan says. "Well, if you say that to me -- I watched Jerry Rice from the practice squad, I watched Tim Brown on the practice field and Fred Biletnikoff as a position coach (all are in the Pro Football Hall of Fame as receivers), so if it ain't that standard, then it's not good enough. And if you don't want to meet that standard and be coached that way, then don't tell me that you want to be great. Just say, I want to make the team. Or I want to play 16 games. Or I want to be on the special teams. Just be honest with me, because I'm going to be honest with you. Mike absolutely has been honest with me and himself; that's why you've seen that skyrocket trajectory that everybody sees every day and that has everybody super excited."

Williams doesn't run from his expectations. The former Clemson star and Vance, South Carolina, native wants to be great. Actually, he needs to be great.

"I feel like I've got a lot of weight on my shoulders, the whole city where I'm from," he says. "I told everybody back home that I'm doing this for everybody, not just me. My mom, my family back home, my friends -- everybody is a part of this journey who helped me get to where I am today. So I've just got to continue to support those people and keep my word. I'm coming out and getting better each day, like I told them I would, and I'm just sticking to (my goal of) being great. The sky is the limit."

It's easy to talk the talk, but McGeoghan knows there are no shortcuts. That's why he got on Williams the first day of training camp when the 23-year-old failed to give full effort during a run drill. Later that day, the two discussed the "why" behind the coach's tough love. Williams acknowledged it was because of his stated desire to be great. McGeoghan then doubled down and challenged Williams to come back the next day and go full tilt during a run drill.

"He had an unbelievable session," McGeoghan says, "and then he made a number of downfield plays that subsequently happened after his mindset was correct. It's not a coincidence that that happens in football. When you become a good teammate, all of a sudden the world starts to fall into place. If you're good at home, oftentimes you come in here with a good mindset where you can learn and grow and develop. If you're all over the place in your social life and things, then you come here and you're not going to be great. It's a total comprehensive makeover or mindset flip for a young man to become a man."

Williams does not mind being pushed. He is healthy and hungry. He knows where he wants to go and has a purpose in his stride.

"I don't think people can understand what it was like last year," he says. "They would say, 'Oh, he was a top pick, he needs to be out there or he's going to be a bust.' I'm like, Whaaaaaatt? I wasn't healthy. ... But I let those things motivate me. The Chargers know what type of guy they got. The coaches know. All those people who said [something negative] are the same people saying I'm going to have a great year. So I'm just going to continue to control what I can control, and that's me coming out here every day and getting better and just doing what I can do."

Philip Rivers Has His Last, Best Chance to Win a Ring

*By Robert Mays
The Ringer

Philip Rivers is the best quarterback of his generation to not win a Super Bowl. That's a knotty thought, implying plenty of accomplishments but a career that's still somewhat unfulfilled. Just ask Rivers, who weighed those complexities when presented with the idea late last week. "I think in some ways, it's a compliment," he says. "I'm appreciative of it. But at the same time, I'd say they're telling the truth. I don't mean that arrogantly. I mean, yeah, we haven't [won a Super Bowl]. We haven't done it."

Part of a 2004 draft class that also featured Eli Manning and Ben Roethlisberger, Rivers is firmly entrenched in the greatest quarterbacking era in NFL history. His peers include those draftmates, former teammate Drew Brees, playoff nemesis Tom Brady, and future Hall of Famers Peyton Manning and Aaron Rodgers. By every major passing statistic, Rivers belongs among that company. He ranks sixth all time in career touchdown passes (374), seventh in adjusted yards per attempt (7.73), and eighth in passing yardage (54,656). Since Rivers took over as the Chargers starter in 2006, they've finished in the top three of Football Outsiders' passing DVOA seven times and cracked the top 10 in 10 seasons. He has consistently ensured that his team fields one of the most efficient passing attacks in football.

"You don't know how many more [chances] you're going to get. ... From an individual standpoint, just knowing the truth is, I don't have that many years left." —Los Angeles Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers

He's also taken the Chargers to the postseason six times since 2006, the same number of playoff appearances as Brees has made in New Orleans. Each time, the Chargers have advanced past the first round. (For reference, Roethlisberger's Steelers have been bounced on wild-card weekend three times.) Since ascending to the starting job, Rivers has never so much as missed a start.

In almost every meaningful way, the résumé Rivers has assembled in Southern California mirrors that of his legendary contemporaries, with one important distinction: Every other member of the league's golden generation of QBs has a ring. And that's why this postseason looms so large. After going four straight seasons without a playoff berth, the Chargers finished 2018 at 12-4 and bring legitimate title aspirations into January. Rivers insists another championship opportunity coming this late in his career doesn't carry extra weight, but acknowledges it does bring a sense of urgency that wasn't always there in the past. At 37, Rivers knows the end of his playing days isn't far off. Starting Sunday against the Ravens, these playoffs may be his final chance to join the club that's eluded him for so long. "You don't know how many more you're going to get," Rivers says. "From a team standpoint, I can say that because there's no guarantee that you're going to be in it from year to year. And from an individual standpoint, just knowing the truth is, I don't have that many years left."

"I think there's no denying the fact that, here we go. We've got a shot."

During Rivers's first few seasons as the Chargers starter, making the playoffs became an expectation. San Diego went 14-2 in 2006, his first campaign after taking over for Brees. In 2007 the Chargers followed a middling 5-5 start with six straight wins en route to the AFC West title. In 2008 they stumbled into the postseason at 8-8, and in 2009 they went 13-3 to once again claim a first-round bye. "We were in '06, '07, '08, '09," Rivers says. "That's just what you do. You get in the playoffs. You have a chance."

Looking back on those missed opportunities, Rivers and other members of the late-2000s Chargers say '06 and '07 sting the most, but for different reasons. The 2006 team was arguably the class of the NFL, averaging a league-high 30.8 points per game on the strength of LaDainian Tomlinson's historic MVP season. While Tomlinson was the franchise's crown jewel, it seemed like a new era of the Chargers' passing game had emerged, with Rivers throwing to All-Pro tight end Antonio Gates and blossoming second-year receiver Vincent Jackson. "I don't feel like that '09 team was anywhere close to what they have now or what we had in '06 and '07," says former Chargers center Nick Hardwick, who was with the franchise from 2004 through 2014. "Talent, strength, the amount of leadership we had on that roster, the coaching staff that we had. That was a stacked organization at that point."

On January 14, 2007, the top-seeded Chargers hosted New England at Qualcomm Stadium in the divisional round. San Diego took a 14-10 lead into halftime before going up 21-13 on a Tomlinson touchdown midway through the fourth quarter. When cornerback Marlon McCree intercepted Tom Brady on a fourth-and-5 with just 6:19 remaining, it seemed as if the Chargers were bound for the AFC championship. Then Troy Brown ripped the ball out of McCree's hands, breathing new life into the Patriots' season and bringing about the Chargers' demise. "You almost have the game wrapped up, and it all goes south in the last four minutes," Rivers says. New England scored five plays later and tacked on a two-point conversion to tie the game. It went on to win, 24-21.

That was a crushing defeat for a group with Super Bowl aspirations, but the blow was softened by the inherent belief throughout the organization that the Chargers had the right core to return to the playoffs. This feeling was vindicated when San Diego rattled off seven straight wins from November 2007 through early January 2008. But no one could have predicted what happened next, in that season's divisional-round matchup against the Colts. With Tomlinson already sidelined after bruising his knee, Rivers jumped to throw a short pass to Darren Sproles early in the third quarter and landed awkwardly on his right leg. Both his meniscus and ACL were partially torn, and backup Billy Volek was forced into action for most of the second half. Somehow, San Diego still knocked off Indianapolis on the road, setting up an AFC championship game clash with the then-17-0 Patriots.

Eleven years later, that game is as a testament to Rivers's toughness—proof that his body may be made up of indestructible metal rather than human bones and tendons. The day after the Chargers beat the Colts, Rivers had arthroscopic surgery on his right knee. He slept on the floor every night that week, with a mechanism on his leg continuously keeping the knee bending through the night. "There was a range of emotions on both ends of the spectrum: 'I'm sure I'll be able to [play]' to 'There's no way,'" Rivers says. "I was crushed. Like, 'Golly, we're a game away, and I'm not good to go.'"

"I remember Norv [Turner] saying, 'You're gonna be in a bunch of these games.' And we haven't. We haven't been back. It just shows you how fleeting it is." —Philip Rivers

Rivers maintains that he wasn't in pain that day in Foxborough. He received no injection, no treatment other than what he'd received all week. The knee buckled a few times, but that was all. Yet while Rivers stayed on the field for the entire game, Tomlinson carried the ball only twice before admitting that his injured MCL was too much to overcome. Gates's turf toe was so serious that it lingered into the offseason and beyond. Hardwick nursed a Lisfranc injury that required surgery during the offseason. San Diego fell to the Pats 21-12, befouled as much by New England's red zone defense as it was by its myriad ailments. "I think the reason that one hurt so much is we were physically so beat up," Rivers says. "I had no knee. Gates didn't have a toe. LT with his MCL. Seriously, it was crazy. Yeah, we're here, but could we please just be a little better equipped?"

The tone in the locker room after that game was somber. Tears flowed. With emotions running high, head coach Norv Turner approached Rivers with a conciliatory message. "I remember Norv saying, 'You're gonna be in a bunch of these games,'" Rivers says. "And we haven't. We haven't been back. It just shows you how fleeting it is."

A few years after Turner tried to comfort Rivers in New England, the veteran coach offered his quarterback some advice that he's remembered ever since. It was 2010 or 2011, near the end of Turner's tenure with the Chargers. By then, the roster from San Diego's days as a playoff fixture had started to turn over, and Turner talked to Rivers about the lifespan of an NFL quarterback. "[Norv] said, 'Hey, there's gonna be a time when all your guys are going to be gone, and you're still gonna be here,'" Rivers says. "I remember thinking, 'OK, I don't know that I get that.' But he was saying that I'm going to outlast some of these guys that I'm used to being around. That there was going to be a little bit of a transition that you go through with younger teammates, and not your core group of guys. And then it happened, and I go, 'Oh, I get it now.'"

Rivers watched as Tomlinson left for the Jets in 2010 free agency. A year later, stalwart guard Kris Dielman retired. Then Jackson left. Then Hardwick. Soon, Rivers found himself in a locker room without a single familiar face aside from the ageless Gates. The final days of that transition coincided with the first major swoon of Rivers's career. From 2014 to 2016, he led the NFL in interceptions twice. The Chargers dropped 12 games in 2015 and 11 the subsequent season. "It's like it is anywhere," Rivers says. "When you're losing, it's just not real fun. You keep losing close games. You keep throwing interceptions to lose close games. Are you going to be miserable, or are you going to fight your way out of it?"

Looking back on that stretch, Rivers credits his wife, Tiffany, for providing the perspective he lacked. "She was reminding me that now is when you can be an even better leader," Rivers says. "You can be even more impactful with these guys. Because they see how you're responding when things are going rough, and see that ... he's still going even though he stunk it up yesterday. You really find out how you lead when things are rough."

Hardwick likens that period of Rivers's career to moving into a new house with a growing family, a scenario that should sound awfully familiar to a quarterback with eight kids and a ninth on the way. "You've got to reidentify roles: what I'm in charge in, what [my wife] is in charge of, what the kids are in charge of, everyone's area of specialty," Hardwick says. "There's a little bit of that. Who's gonna provide the energy to the locker room. Who's gonna be the stern one? Who's gonna the lighthearted guy who knows when to crack a joke? Who's gonna be the fatherly figure?"

"He kind of sets the tone for helping these young guys grow into it, and you create a new set of guys that you can grow with. I think that's where we've gotten to now." —Los Angeles Chargers offensive coordinator Ken Whisenhunt

Initially, Rivers struggled to determine which hat was right for him in an ever-changing locker room. He often felt as if he didn't fit into a group of 20-somethings with dramatically different lifestyles than his own. "At first, it took a little getting used to," Rivers says. "I just knew how every guy operated that was part of our [old] core." He admits that he had a difficult time adjusting to the new wave of personalities, and that his struggles only compounded when he tried to graft his methods onto teammates who were a decade his junior. "I've always told people that my favorite part about this game—and I love Sundays, all that stuff—is being a teammate," Rivers says. "That was something, through that span, where it was, 'Don't lose that.' It was, 'You're the quarterback who's still here, and here's this new group of guys that aren't your guys.' But [don't] just come to work and play."

The crucial step was letting go. Instead of trying to control others' habits, Rivers learned to understand the way this core of players operated. "I think at first, I was a little stubborn," Rivers says. "We'd be in there watching film, and I'd think, 'Why does he get in here at that time?' It was a little bit of, 'Why am I being so hard-headed about every little thing?'" By allowing his younger teammates to find their own way, Rivers was able to step back and appreciate their development. He mentions how rewarding it was to watch 2015 first-round pick Melvin Gordon transition from an early-down back to a complete back with a total grasp of protections and place in the passing game following Danny Woodhead's season-ending injury in 2016. He talks about watching receiver Keenan Allen morph from a rookie who seemed to hate football into the player and the presence he is today. "He kind of sets the tone for helping these young guys grow into it, and you create a new set of guys that you can grow with," offensive coordinator Ken Whisenhunt says of Rivers. "I think that's where we've gotten to now."

Whisenhunt also notes that while the organization's move to Los Angeles last season made for a rocky transition, it served as a crucible for many on the roster. Rivers spent the year commuting from San Diego to the team's makeshift facility in Costa Mesa. The Chargers split time at two different practice fields. But after stumbling out of the gate at 0-4, this group came together. Their 6-2 surge down the stretch was evidence that the team was on the cusp. "Displaced, lot of time together," Whisenhunt says. "Having to overcome getting a bus to go to the practice field, getting dressed in a little locker room. Going up to the StubHub [Center]. All of those things, which at times are difficult, also make you closer. You just say, 'OK, we're together, and we'll make it work.'"

The process of arriving at this point brought its share of painful memories, but has culminated in the sort of Chargers roster that rivals those Rivers had during the championship window early in his career. As Hardwick puts up, each room of the house is now in order. For the first time in years, the Chargers offensive line is solidified. Allen and Gordon are flanked by a varied collection of pass catchers who fill specific and diverse roles. This team may be entering the playoffs as the no. 5 seed in the AFC and require three road wins to reach the Super Bowl, but Rivers knows the pieces are in place. "It's not, 'Oh, man, we're really going to have to play beyond ourselves to somehow make a run,'" Rivers says. "It's 'Let's just go do our job and play.' We have what we need right here."

One strength that Rivers sees with this Chargers team, compared with former versions in both San Diego and Los Angeles, is that it hasn't just relied on stars during crucial moments. While L.A. boasts seven 2018 Pro Bowlers, more than any other franchise in football, plenty of the team's less-heralded contributors have come through when it's mattered most. A telling example came late in the Chargers' 29-28 win over the Chiefs in Week 15. With Allen sidelined after suffering a hip injury early in the game, reserve receiver Travis Benjamin was forced to assume slot duties for much of the night. On the final drive of the game, with the Chargers down seven and facing a fourth-and-8 with 1:11 remaining on the clock, Rivers ripped a throw to Benjamin down the middle for a 26-yard gain. That set up the game-winning score.

"I would contend that he cares about football more than anyone I've ever seen care about the sport. ... I know it would mean the world to guys who were ever his teammate, whether it was two weeks or 10 years, to see Philip Rivers get a ring. There's not a more deserving man." —former Chargers center Nick Hardwick

The throw to Benjamin was vintage Rivers, both in how it was executed and how the QB talks about it weeks later. Based on the coverage that he could decipher before the snap, Rivers had whittled down his receiver choices to Benjamin and Gates. He had a hunch that safety Daniel Sorensen would stick with Gates long enough to make his longtime tight end a riskier target. "And then Travis is just flyin'," Rivers says, growing more animated as he describes what unfolded. "I don't know what's gonna happen if I throw him this ball, but he's gonna be flyin'." I know that. So as I'm raising my leg, it's, 'Ohhh K!' I'm going Travis! I know I can't wait around and let the DB get his head around. I've got to throw it early and trust he's going to be there."

Benjamin's lack of separation when Rivers let the ball go was another reminder of the quarterback's status as one of the great anticipatory throwers ever. And the way he describes it captures his essence as a player. "Those are the ones, those couple throws, and there's really no humble way to say this, but you go, 'Gosh, that was awesome,'" Rivers says. "Not that it's, 'Hey, that was an awesome throw.' Just the thought process, the whole thing that goes into it. Travis is in the slot. He's never in the slot. That adds into it. You appreciate those."

To talk to Rivers about football is to bear witness to his transformation into the demonstrative, endlessly GIFable character he's known as by many NFL fans. Every nationally televised Chargers game is another showcase for the latest Rivers sideline reaction shot. During a 22-10 loss to Baltimore in Week 16, he pleaded with officials after losing his helmet on a big hit in the second half. Afterward, Gates joked with his quarterback that a decade and a half into his career, people still don't get him. "Gates was laughing about it, going, 'You just can't help it, that's what people don't know,'" Rivers says. "You really can't help it. When you're out there, that's just you."

One of the recent clips that made the rounds came from the sideline before the start of a Sunday night game in Pittsburgh, an eventual 33-30 Chargers win. As he went for his traditional pregame sip of water, Rivers could hear a fan in the stands yelling his name. “I heard someone going, ‘Philip! Philip!’ And you know when someone calls you, and it just sounds like they know you?” Rivers says. “I looked up, and it was my brother.” With a nod, Rivers responded to Stephen with a simple, “Let’s go”; like so many other Rivers moments, it quickly spawned a wave of memes.

At this point, the oldest of Rivers’s eight children are fluent in the internet. They see the clips being passed around and understand how their father fits into the NFL landscape. For the first time, they also grasp what a Super Bowl run would mean to Philip’s career. In the days leading up to the Chargers’ regular-season finale in Denver, Rivers talked to a few of them about the realities of the playoffs. “I said, do y’all know, [even if] we don’t get a bye, you’re three wins from being in the Super Bowl,” Rivers says. “[They] were like, ‘Oh my gosh, that’s crazy.’ They’re excited. Because when you start talking about the tournament, it’s not this long, drawn-out tournament. You’re three games away. When you give yourself a chance, you give yourself a chance.”

With wild-card weekend approaching, Rivers understands what’s at stake. When asked whether a ring would mean more to him—and his legacy—than any other quarterback in the field, he cautiously relents. “I think that’s a fair statement,” Rivers says. “That’s not the drive. But that’s a fair statement.” He’s hesitant to engage with the idea more than that, instead shifting the focus back to what a title would mean for this team. Bring it up with his former teammates, though, and they’re much more direct. “I can tell you what it would mean for all of us: We’re watching him just hoping he can get his ring,” Hardwick says. “We know how much he cares. I would contend that he cares about football more than anyone I’ve ever seen care about the sport. We’ve watched him give his entire soul to being a better football player, a better leader. I know it would mean the world to guys who were ever his teammate, whether it was two weeks or 10 years, to see Philip Rivers get a ring. There’s not a more deserving man.”

As Rivers stares down what might be his final chance to assume his place among the greatest quarterbacks in history, he wants to make it clear that his pursuit was never about hardware. It was never about his individual standing or shedding the notion that he could be remembered as this generation’s Dan Marino. It’s about getting to say, just one time, that the Chargers stand alone. “You want to stand at the top of the mountain with a group of guys and say, ‘We’re the best,’” Rivers says. “That’s really what drives you. That’s the goal.”

A Family Affair: A Look at Philip Rivers Through the Eyes of His Children

And right now, like any good father, he’s looking for his wife and kids.

It’s Sunday, Nov. 4, and Rivers is about to make his 200th career start, a remarkable feat that only three other quarterbacks have accomplished. He’s standing on the sideline at CenturyLink Field in Seattle, his hand over his heart as the Star-Spangled Banner is sung in front of nearly 69,000 frenzied fans.

Rivers knows where his wife and four oldest children are sitting, and suddenly he locks eyes on them.

We’ve seen Rivers fired up so many times over the years, but it’s nothing compared to what he’s feeling at this particular moment.

“I got emotional during that national anthem,” he recalled days later while sitting at home surrounded by his wife and children. “They were sitting dead across from our sideline. I could see them up there, just looking at my four oldest and my wife, and I just thought, ‘How awesome is this?!’ I’m literally living out my childhood dream, we’re playing in Seattle in that awesome atmosphere, the national anthem’s playing and there are my oldest four of the eight we have watching me at 37 years old playing a game. It was kind of one of those surreal moments. You have those little snapshots of time that you’re just like, ‘Gosh, it doesn’t get much better.’”

Philip Rivers is a surefire Hall of Famer, his bust certain to one day join the other legends immortalized in Canton. However, while football means so much to him, it’s a distant second when compared to his family.

That’s why in addition to the many responsibilities that come with being an NFL quarterback, he makes sure it never comes at the expense of his family.

Philip married his high school sweetheart, Tiffany Goodwin, back in 2001 following his freshman year of college. The couple has eight children (and expecting a ninth in March) – Halle (16), Caroline (13), Grace (12), Gunner (10), Sarah (8), Peter (7), Rebecca (5) and Clare (3) – and life in the Rivers’ household is like most others.

“He always wants to be with us,” said 10-year-old Gunner, the oldest of Philip’s two sons. “Whenever he’s home, he plays with us and he’s with us all the time. Wherever we go out – we go all kinds of places – random people just come up and ask for his autograph and for pictures. It’s cool. But he’s always there for us. But when he’s home, we like to throw the football in the yard. We like to putt on the putting green, watch football and do things like that.”

“He’s so selfless,” added Halle, Rivers’ firstborn. “He’s an NFL quarterback; he’s doing a million different things every day, but every day he comes home, and he wants to be with us. If he has one extra minute that he could do something else, he’ll be with us.”

For all those reasons and more, Philip’s family wanted to do something special to celebrate his 200th start.

It’s a milestone that clearly meant a lot to their father, so they threw their dad a surprise party complete with balloons and his favorite meal.

“He’s not the type to toot his own horn or anything, but we just wanted to make it special for him because he does everything for everybody and doesn’t really ever do anything for himself,” Tiffany said. “So, the kids, of course, were super excited to throw a party for dad. We didn’t do it right when he got back because he beat us home from Seattle, so we waited and did it on Wednesday. It was really fun. We had Reuben sandwiches, which is his favorite meal. And the kids decorated little signs. We tried to hide when he walked in, and then we popped out and surprised him.”

“That was special,” Rivers said. “They had a big thing of balloons and a two and a zero and a zero and they surprised (me). They did it in the living room and they had Chargers tablecloths down. It was meaningful to me just because they knew the 200 starts were special to me. It was meaningful to me that they wanted to make a big deal of it.”

That party is something Philip will always cherish, but so are the family dinners he and Tiffany make sure they all enjoy throughout every week. They all sit around the table Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, talking about their days and what’s going on in their lives.

“Those family dinners are the best,” Philip said. “That’s something we make sure to do even though obviously it’s harder in season. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday we’ll have them for sure. When I come home it’s about ready to go and the girls are all helping, and we all sit in there and eat and kind of tell school stories. I tell a little bit of what’s going on if there is anything new.”

“It means a lot to have those dinners and have him at home,” said Halle. “It really does because we know how busy he could be, but he wants to be with us. It’s fun. There’s never a dull moment with eight kids, so it’s fun with all of us at home. We usually sit down to dinner, all of us every night, we try to. It’s awesome.”

They’ll grab a plate and huddle around the TV to watch that night’s primetime game.

“We call it ballgame food,” Philip said. “We don’t do a sit-down dinner Monday night. We have the game on and some people are sitting at the kitchen island, some people will sit in front of the TV and we watch it together.”

While a small group of the Rivers bunch do travel to games throughout the year, most of the time they watch the Chargers’ road games at home on TV. Those Sundays are a family affair, with everyone huddled together rooting on their dad from thousands of miles away.

However, as you’d expect, Rivers’ children prefer to watch their dad in person at StubHub Center.

"It's kind of crazy because we're wearing his jersey and sometimes people say 'Hi, Philip Rivers,' because I am wearing the jersey," Gunner said. "But they don't actually know that I'm actually Philip Rivers! Gunner is my middle name."

Those home games mean the world to Philip as well, who often looks up at his family after a big play.

"I love after we score a touchdown, looking up there and seeing how fired up they are," he said. "It's cool to see how excited they are when we score, and we make big plays and all those things."

Not many people have a father as famous as Philip Rivers, so it's hard to put yourself in the children's shoes. Thus, you may be surprised to learn that it was only recently that Halle realized just how much her father means to so many people.

"He's been famous since before I was born," she said. "It's just been normal kind of my whole life. It's all I've known. But once I got older it was like, 'Oh wow, there's a lot of people watching him every Sunday.' I really only realized it the last couple years."

While Philip Rivers has produced countless memories that he and millions of Chargers fans hold dear to their heart, some of his favorite moments on the field come long after the clock strikes zero. After he's showered, changed and handled his media responsibilities, Rivers often still trots back out onto the field to throw the ball around with his kids.

Gunner likes to pretend he's a Charger, making those same exact plays his father's teammates made earlier that day.

"It's really cool when we do that," Gunner said. "Whoever makes that big play, sometimes I try to do the same thing there on the field. If someone has a pick, I try to do the same thing as them."

Like any professional athlete, Rivers' career has been filled with ups and downs. And during those lean years, it was his family that helped put things in perspective.

"When you have a bad day, or we have a tough loss, which thankfully we haven't had many this year, but you come home and there's sidewalk chalk and scooters and bicycles, all this stuff strewn out over your driveway, that for me was always that deep breath, 'Everything's going to be alright. Everything's OK.'"

Of course, right now Philip and the Bolts are enjoying one of the best stretches in franchise history. They're fresh off a thrilling 33-30 win over the Pittsburgh Steelers to improve their record to 9-3 for the sixth time in team history.

In addition, number 17 is two games removed from one of the finest performances in league history. In the Chargers' win over the Arizona Cardinals, Philip set the NFL single-game record by completing 25-straight passes. He also finished the game with the highest single-game completion percentage by a QB with at least 20 attempts (96.6).

While this is a special team in his career, it's even more meaningful for Philip to have all this professional success at this point when his children can really appreciate it.

"It's been really fun," he said. "Now that the kids are older, it's a little more where, shoot, we can sit there and talk about the season. Who beat who, and who won and, 'Oh, I can't believe they got beat.' So that's fun. I talk to Gunner about the opening plays of the game. I tell him what we're looking for, and he understands it. I explain if they play quarters we're going to do this and things like that. And now Pete's getting super into it, too. He's just seven, but he asked me a few minutes ago (if) we're going to throw routes today. It's turning into where he's starting to like it more and more, too. Gunner also plays fantasy football. He plays with my brother. They have a little family league and one with the families from the beach back when we go in the summer, some of those kids play. The girls are young, but they know players' names. They know all the quarterbacks' names, this and that. So, it's been really fun."

As Philip noted, these days he likes to go over the game plan with Gunner, which is something his son looks forward to each week.

"Before the games, we talk about are there going to be any trick plays," Gunner said. "We'll talk about who is going to get the ball more this game. And then after the game we'll talk about all the big plays. Who had picks and who had touchdowns. It's really cool."

Family obviously means the world to Philip Rivers, and he doesn't pretend to have all the answers to fatherhood.

Still, he's clearly well versed in what it takes to be there for your children despite juggling tons of other responsibilities.

So, what advice does he have for all the other dads out there?

"I think it's a challenge, and I'm by no means perfect at it, nor is anybody, but I think what I would always tell other dads is to try to be present. Just try to be there. Sometimes you have long work days. Sometimes you have to be on the road a lot. But when you're home, be home. When you're present, be present the best you can. Like I said, we all fail. But I think from a dad standpoint, children want our time. Sometimes it might just be five minutes, and sometimes it can be a lot more, but I think they want our time and to be engaged with them and present."

Of course, it also helps having someone like Tiffany by your side.

"We're best friends," Philip said of his wife. "That to me has been the key. Whenever it gets kind of crazy, we'll figure it out together. She's awesome. Our family wouldn't be what it is without her. She provides a great steadiness for all of us. She's great for me also from a football standpoint as far as balancing my energy and passion I have for football. And she's the same with our family. She's very steady, and she very much lives in the moment. She's very present. Through all the ups and downs that comes with football, and all the commitments that I obviously have, I can't imagine doing this without her. There's no way I could do it without her."

Likewise, Tiffany couldn't be prouder of the man she married and the type of father he's been over the years.

"What it boils down to is he's the most selfless person I know," she said. "He still surprises me. Obviously, wives know their husbands best, but he's just really selfless. He comes home and when he's home, he's home. That's it. He'll look at film or whatever he needs to, but he's very intuitive, too. He knows kind of who needs what at what time. I guess one thing that we love to do is just talk to our kids a lot so we kind of know where they're at and what's going on in all their lives. (It's) a really constant thing that he's really good at keeping up with, and not just keeping up with it but he seems to really enjoy it and I've really learned from him in that aspect. I think that was definitely a trait in his family where they spent time together not because they had to, (but) because they really wanted to. They're a really close family so that's definitely how we are, too."

By the time their ninth child (seventh daughter) is old enough to know her dad is a NFL quarterback, Philip may have already hung up his cleats. But she'll enjoy countless stories with dad at the dinner table.

No kidding, Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers made his NFL dreams come true

Philip Rivers didn't like mayonnaise or Brussels sprouts. He wanted a younger brother and good grades. And, like so many 10-year-olds across the country, he dreamed about suiting up for an NFL team.

All that is memorialized in a yellowed school project that's framed in the basement of his parents' modest home in Decatur, Ala. The handwritten poster is entitled "All About Me..." and it's a Canton-worthy artifact, featuring the cherubic face of young Philip superimposed onto a photo of striding Minnesota Vikings star Cris Carter on a Sports Illustrated magazine cover.

Now that is a vision board.

From basement dreams to stratospheric reality, Rivers has ascended to the top of the game, last Sunday joining Brett Favre and brothers Peyton and Eli Manning as the only quarterbacks to start 200 consecutive games. He's having a tremendous season for the 6-2 Chargers, undeniably playing his way into the NFL Most Valuable Player conversation. Although they won't be in Oakland for Sunday's game, Joan and Steve Rivers travel to several Chargers games each year and are relishing their son's 16th season in the league.

"They know it's the homestretch in a sense," Rivers said. "Hopefully, there are a handful more [seasons]. They want to see as many as they can."

Rivers, 36, and wife Tiffany were junior high sweethearts in Alabama, and have eight children. They opted to stay in San Diego when the Chargers moved north, and Philip commutes 70 miles each way to practice, in a full-outfitted SUV that allows him to study video while he's driven.

Steve and Joan gave serious thought to moving to San Diego in 2004 when Philip was a rookie. They had younger children — Stephen, 11, and Anna, 6 — and were thinking that Steve would coach high school football, as he did in Alabama and North Carolina (when Philip was at North Carolina State). But the yearning for their hometown was too strong.

"We ended up staying about six weeks, but Joan and I finally said, 'We've got to go back home,'" Steve said. "I couldn't believe the traffic. I mean, it's beautiful, wonderful, awesome, nothing bad to say. It's just different for a small-town guy. When I say traffic, I mean all lanes. I couldn't get over it. At 10 o'clock at night there was traffic. At 10 o'clock at night in Decatur, Alabama, people are watching the nightly news and getting ready for bed."

Close your eyes and listen to Steve, and he sounds almost identical to Philip. Same soft drawl. Same homespun expressions and self-effacing wit. He was a quarterback and defensive back at Mississippi State, his college career mostly derailed early because of a knee injury.

"I was maybe an above-average athlete, but I had no business being in the SEC," he said. "But Mississippi State was really low. I was doing well the spring of my sophomore year, and I tore my knee up. Back then, 1968, '69, rehab was they put a hard cast on you from the top of your leg to your toes for six weeks."

"I was fast like Philip," he said with a chuckle. "Then I got the cast on, and I was really fast like Philip."

Philip wasn't quick, but he was a quick study. He was obsessed with the game, helping his dad as a ball boy for the high school team for years before he played there. When the chain gang would come onto the field for a measurement, young Philip would wriggle his way into the officials' huddle and hold his hands apart toward the sideline to signal exactly how much was required for a first down.

"I felt like I could contribute," he said. "I felt like they really needed me to tell them if it was a foot or two feet."

A penchant for leadership surfaced early in Rivers, who used to pop to his feet at high school basketball games when he was 4 or 5 and theatrically wave his arms as if conducting the pep band.

"It's so funny, me looking back now," he said. "I remember asking my mom, 'Can you be the quarterback and the drum major at halftime?' I mean it's like, what in the world? I wanted to go play quarterback, and I wanted to lead the band. I don't know how old I was but I vaguely remember asking them that."

On the field, Rivers is a traffic cop before the snap, directing teammates this way and that. He has passed for 19 touchdowns in eight games, tied for the second-highest total of his career at the midway point. Seven times Rivers has posted a passer rating of 100 or more, a personal high in the first eight games of a season.

"He's just on his game, man," running back Melvin Gordon told reporters after Sunday's victory at Seattle. "Phil, he's a guru at this. He plays chess out there. He knows what's going on. He knows where guys are going to be, studies film like crazy. I watch him all the time, so this is expected from Phil."

Dozens of quarterbacks have put a good season or two together, but precious few have shown the longevity, durability and sustained excellence of Rivers. Good fortune is a part of that, and so is toughness. Rivers famously gritted through a torn ACL to keep the Chargers in the hunt at New England in the 2007 AFC championship game. It was a two-point game through three quarters before the Patriots pulled away in the fourth for a 21-12 victory.

Rivers got significantly tougher during his sophomore year of high school when, because a senior was starting at quarterback, he was moved to weakside linebacker.

"I really grew as a football player that year, definitely in the toughness department," he said. "Even when they threw me in there, early on I was a little shocked with the contact. Not so much scared, but you're taking on a fullback running right at you. I learned a lot. I enjoyed that."

Rivers got a lot of his competitiveness from his mom, who flashes it even when playing board games with her grandchildren. And he figures he developed his somewhat unorthodox throwing style — he delivers the ball from all sorts of arm angles — from all those years as a ball boy for his dad.

"When I wasn't needed to spot the ball at practice, or whatever else I was needed to do, me and the other coaches' sons were throwing the football," he said. "It was a varsity regular-sized ball, and I was 8 years old. The only way you could throw it was kind of lay it in your hand and kind of push it. So I think that's where it started."

During his freshman year at North Carolina State, Rivers was coached by Norm Chow, who contemplated tinkering with his throwing motion. Chow sent a tape of the young quarterback to a fellow passing guru, Mike Holmgren, who weighed in with an opinion.

"I wouldn't touch it," Holmgren said. "He gets it where it's supposed to be going. On time."

The same might be said of Rivers' NFL career, the one he pined for so long ago. Perfect? No. But he's gotten where he's supposed to be going.

Inside Philip Rivers' game within the game: Stories of mental battles

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- The Chargers and Dolphins were tied 24-24 late in their 2016 game at San Diego when Philip Rivers, having brought his team to the brink of field goal range, worked the play clock from his senior command post in the shotgun formation.

The suspense built with every tick of the clock as the Chargers' career passing leader searched for whatever answers he could pry from the Dolphins' defense. Finally, with 10 seconds left before the Chargers needed to snap the ball, network TV microphones picked up Rivers calling out a familiar audible.

Thus began a tactical battle that would span two seasons, leaving Dolphins defensive coordinator Matt Burke with a story to tell -- and an appreciation for Rivers that so many in the game share.

This 36-year-old quarterback with a league-leading 195 consecutive starts recently passed Fran Tarkenton for sixth on the NFL's all-time list for touchdown passes. Only Peyton Manning, Brett Favre, Tom Brady, Drew Brees and Dan Marino have more. Rivers ranks in the NFL's all-time top four for passer rating, yards per attempt and adjusted yards per attempt among the 26 quarterbacks with at least 5,000 career pass attempts.

Yet there is no stat representing what Rivers enjoys most about the games themselves, and what makes him so fun for opponents to play against. The tactical battles with opposing players and coaches bring special pleasure to those competing at the highest level. Especially Rivers.

"No question," said Rivers, now in his 15th season. "Beyond the camaraderie and being with the guys, my favorite part is the game within the game."

So the next time you see an exultant Rivers running along the opponent's sideline after a big play -- a "flyby," as one opposing coach put it -- remember that there's probably a reason deeper than the play's result itself. Rivers probably won the game within the game as well.

Watch the screen! Watch the screen!

Back to that 2016 Dolphins-Chargers game in San Diego. Fourth quarter, tie score, Chargers ball, first-and-10 from the Miami 42. Game clock at 1:21 and rolling, play clock at 14 seconds. One timeout left for the Chargers.

Rivers, leaning forward in a ready position from the shotgun formation, will soon be heard making a "Mickey" call that has been a staple of his pre-snap audible game.

"Easy, easy," the broadcast audio reveals Rivers enunciating.

Rivers' teammates now know to expect the snap soon, and to listen for last-second changes. The play clock is down to 12 seconds now.

"Easy, easy ... EASY, EASY," Rivers repeats with growing urgency.

"Mickey easy," Rivers says abruptly.

The quarterback is the only one speaking, but that is about to change.

"Mickey Phil! Mickey Phil!" Rivers shouts, and now it's on.

Linebacker Jelani Jenkins reacts as though he has just caught Rivers exiting the Dolphins' team hotel with their defensive game plan in a briefcase. Jenkins jumps up and down, arm raised in a desperate attempt to alert his teammates before the snap.

"Hey, watch the screen!" Jenkins screams from his position outside the offensive right tackle, maybe 7 yards away from Rivers and well within the quarterback's line of sight.

"Watch the screen! Watch the screen!"

Chaos has replaced the calm before the snap. Rivers' voice has ceded to a cacophony. Two seconds remain on the play clock. The moment of truth is near.

Rivers burns the Chargers' final timeout. He walks to the sideline knowing this battle was lost. The Dolphins were wise to the audible. One of their linebackers at the time, Donald Butler, had spent the previous five seasons with the Chargers, so he had heard all the calls from Rivers: Tiger, Mickey, Massachusetts, Chocolate ...

Both teams changed their playcalls during the timeout. Things couldn't have worked out better for the Dolphins. On the very next play, linebacker Kiko Alonso dropped into coverage and gathered Rivers' pass for a pick-six interception. This Week 10 game was all but over, but the game within the game was only beginning.

'You won't get Philip Rivers twice'

Rivers would exact some revenge when the teams played again in Week 2 of the 2017 season. The score was 3-3 in the second quarter of the rematch when Rivers, drawing upon the screen call that Jenkins sniffed out in the previous season, convinced the Dolphins he was audibling to another screen, just like last time.

"We went through the same verbiage, signaled and everything," Rivers said.

Two Miami defenders swarmed to cover a potential receiver screen at the snap, blanketing Travis Benjamin just outside the yard-line numbers. Alonso raced toward Benjamin as well. The hook was set. By the time Alonso realized his mistake, reversed course and sprinted into coverage on Keenan Allen, the receiver was 4 yards behind him and pulling away. Rivers fired a strike to Allen up the seam for a 24-yard gain to the Miami 4-yard line.

"I will never forget," said Burke, the Dolphins' defensive coordinator. "We are like, 'Watch the screen!' He hits the screen-and-go on us and does the little flyby on the sideline and it was just like, honestly, I think he relished winning that mental battle, tricking us, as much as he enjoyed having a 30-yard completion on us or whatever it was."

The Chargers would get a touchdown out of the drive.

"You won't get Philip Rivers twice," Denver Broncos coach Vance Joseph said. "He is the son of a coach and he gets it. We got him one time years ago with this pressure off the slot. The next time we played him, we ran the same pressure and the only tell was how the front was aligned. Philip checked to a screen in the slot and got a touchdown. A lot of quarterbacks, when they win, they don't even know why they beat you. Philip knows why he beat you."

'Guys just relish those moments'

Burke has a bachelor's degree in psychology from Dartmouth and a master's in education from Boston College, so we might expect him to relish these mental battles as well. He said Rivers is particularly skilled at using every available second on the play clock, knowing that the defense will usually panic before Rivers ever does.

When Burke was linebackers coach with Cincinnati in 2015, the Bengals' Vincent Rey, a Duke graduate who also embraces the mental side of the game, spent all week reminding himself what coaches had been telling him: not to let Rivers goad him into declaring the defense's alignment too long before the snap. Like Peyton Manning, Rivers can be especially dramatic at the line of scrimmage. Is he changing the play or just messing?

A big test arrived on a third-and-6 in the fourth quarter. Rivers unleashed a triple cadence with an early leg lift. Was the snap imminent? Rey resisted the temptation to adjust the defensive front to the Bengals' preferred alignment. Who would blink first? As the play clock wound down, Rivers was the one who appeared out of sorts, clapping his hands feverishly to initiate the snap. The Bengals got a sack out of the play.

"Vinny was just so excited that he was able to outlast him and hold it down where Philip was clapping and trying to get the snap," Burke said. "We get the sack and Vinny goes crazy on the sideline, running over, 'I got him! I got him!' Guys just relish those moments."

'I'm about to die a slow death'

Recently retired 11-year NFL linebacker Paul Posluszny compared the feeling to a slow death -- that moment before the ball is snapped when the defender knows the veteran quarterback across the line of scrimmage has solved the puzzle and placed the most vulnerable defender in his crosshairs.

Posluszny experienced one of those moments during a 2016 game between his Jacksonville Jaguars and Rivers' Chargers.

"We are in a zone pressure and Philip sees it based off our alignment, how the safeties are down, very small details like that -- details that him and Brady can pick up, but so few others can," Posluszny said.

The tight shot of the quarterback's face moments before the snap can be the analytical TV viewer's enemy, hiding the shifts and motions that dictate the action when play begins. In this case, the camera captured Rivers' eyes locking in on his unshown prey -- Posluszny -- like a hawk spotting a bunny in a meadow. There was no secret what play Rivers was checking into. The Chargers' Benjamin, 175 pounds and the owner of a 4.36-second time in the 40-yard dash, aligned as the No. 3 receiver -- directly across from a certain 232-pound former Butkus Award winner.

"He starts making his checks, looks at me and makes sure nothing changes on my side," Posluszny said. "I said, 'He's coming at me. I'm about to die a slow death.'"

Rivers' pass to Benjamin gained 43 yards.

"Even if you have a super-sharp Mike linebacker like Luke Kuechly and Philip is making his check, you need to be so instantaneous to counteract that," Posluszny said. "There is not enough time to communicate it across the board unless you go to something that is so, so simple -- your base defense, Day 1 install."

Even then, it can be difficult to communicate the changes to cornerbacks who are locked into their matchups on the perimeter.

"Against other quarterbacks, maybe younger ones that don't have the command of the offense or the ability to make that check, we're fine," Posluszny said. "We are bringing a zone pressure, pressure is going to get home, plenty of time for me. But Philip sees that right away, gets the ball off in time, knows where the pressure is coming from, knows where he needs to move in the pocket for that extra split second to give him time to get the throw off. It's uncanny."

'He got it word-for-word, actually'

The Chargers and Seattle Seahawks played an epic game in the September heat of San Diego back in 2014, when Seattle was the defending Super Bowl champion. With the on-field temperature reaching 120 degrees at kickoff, Rivers completed 28 of 37 passes for 284 yards and three touchdowns with no interceptions as the Chargers won 30-21 -- one of only three times a Seahawks opponent reached 30 points from 2012 to 2014, a span of 48 games.

This game surely must have featured some advanced gamesmanship, but when I asked Seattle's Bobby Wagner for his favorite Rivers story, the All-Pro middle linebacker reached back days, not years.

"This preseason, we were running a blitz against him, we walked to the line of scrimmage and he called out our blitz," Wagner said. "He couldn't check it, so he called timeout. And he walked up and he was like, 'Y'all running such-and-such, huh?' I was like, 'Nah,' but I was thinking, 'Dang, he got it word-for-word, actually.' You see a guy at that age still putting in the work, it is impressive and inspiring."

Lessons from 19 games vs. Rivers

Derrick Johnson faced Rivers 19 times when the linebacker played for the Kansas City Chiefs, and he'll add to the total this season after signing with the Oakland Raiders. The 14th-year veteran called Rivers a master of looking off defenders, especially when tight end Antonio Gates was involved.

"That used to kill me -- I hated it," Johnson said. "Most quarterbacks, you go through a progression. He is like, 'Nope, I am going to hold you here.' He holds in the middle for a couple seconds, then keeps his shoulders right at Gates in the middle, and then he throws it outside the hash to somebody else on a curl route or some in-breaking route or even a running back on the outside."

Johnson echoed the Dolphins' Burke when he said sometimes teams will make borderline random defensive calls just to make it impossible for Rivers to decipher them.

"His knowledge of the game is out the roof, his passion for the game is unbelievable -- just a very fun guy to play against," said Johnson, who has a 9-10 career record in those 19 matchups against Rivers. "He talks a little noise. He is jawing back at you -- not cussing, but talking trash. And after the play, he is laughing with you at times."

For example?

"Honestly, he has gotten me more times than I've gotten him, but one time he was in the shotgun, there was only one linebacker in the box [Johnson] and he was checking to a run," Johnson said.

It could have been one of those slow-death experiences Posluszny described, but Johnson adjusted his alignment just enough to get a piece of the running back. What became a forgettable 2-yard run for everyone else is a lasting memory for the linebacker involved. That's the game within the game.

"If you see the film, you are saying, 'My goodness, if I didn't move over, 40-yard touchdown right there,'" Johnson said. "Right after I hit the guy, Philip Rivers said, 'Oh my goodness, you should have seen that play. That was a touchdown!'"

'There is nothing like it'

In a time of relative tumult for the NFL off the field, Rivers is a weekly reminder that the game itself can be as fun and rewarding as ever. On the field, in the moment, the emotion that animates Rivers' competitive streak has endured through nearly 200 consecutive starts and even a franchise relocation to Los Angeles.

"Philip loves the game and he loves to compete and you can tell," retired Chargers center Nick Hardwick said, "but deep down, the essence of his enjoyment on game day comes through his preparation that ends up paying off, where it was almost an 'I got you' or 'I knew it' moment, where the film matches up with the playbook, with the practice study, with what he sees in the game. That fist bump that you do after it all comes together, there is nothing like it."

It's a feeling Rivers hopes to enjoy in Week 3 when he faces a highly ranked Rams defense featuring former AFC West adversaries Wade Phillips, Marcus Peters and Aqib Talib. There are danger signs. Peters picked off Rivers four times while with Kansas City, tied for the most interceptions off Rivers by a single player. Talib has one pick in eight matchups between the two.

We'll know that game's winner Sunday.

As for finding out who won the games within the game? That could take a while.

Philip Rivers Renewed: At 36, Chargers QB Sees a Prime Chance to Seal His Legacy

COSTA MESA, Calif. — Such an interesting ball cap.

Worn and weathered, it undoubtedly has been around the Chargers longer than most of their players and coaches. Once it was deep black; now it's faded and splotted with gray. If hats could talk, it could tell some stories.

Written across the front of it is a Latin phrase. It translates to, "Now I begin."

A few years back, this was the Chargers' motto. It was on the wall of their locker room and on the chests of their players.

A priest friend of Philip Rivers introduced the idea to him long ago, and he has carried it with him since, as a quarterback and as a man. "It's a never-ending beginning," says Rivers, who wears the hat throughout his days. "You are always beginning again and again and again."

If he has just thrown a touchdown pass, he begins again, working toward the next one on the sidelines. If he has just lost a heartbreaking game, he begins again, studying the next week's opponent.

He is in his 15th NFL season, with 51,028 passing yards behind him and nowhere near as many in front of him, but he begins again, to be his best, like he did when he was a rookie. Most people would consider this stage of Rivers' career a closure. Not Rivers.

As he prepares to match passes with young Rams quarterback Jared Goff in a battle for Los Angeles on Sunday, the concept of beginning again has never resonated more with Rivers.

"Nunc coepi," Rivers says, mixing Alabama drawl with the classical language. "I must begin again."

Beginning again isn't always easy.

It wasn't easy in 2010. After a 13-3 regular-season record, the Chargers lost 17-14 to the Jets in the first round of the playoffs at home when Nate Kaeding missed three field-goal attempts.

It wasn't easy after losing in the divisional round of the playoffs in 2007 to the Patriots. The Chargers were the top seed in the AFC after finishing the regular season 14-2. They were loaded with 11 Pro Bowlers, including the NFL's Most Valuable Player, LaDainian Tomlinson. They led for most of the game until Tom Brady led a surge that gave the Patriots a three-point lead with 1:10 left. Rivers brought the Chargers to the 36-yard line, but Kaeding missed a 54-yard field-goal attempt. The Chargers lost 24-21.

It wasn't easy in 2008 after losing the AFC Championship Game. Rivers tore his ACL in the divisional playoff game and had a hush-hush arthroscopic surgery between games. He put a brace on his leg and went out and threw 37 passes, leading a team of wounded warriors in one of the most courageous performances in NFL history. The Chargers scored only four field goals in a 21-12 loss to Brady's Patriots.

"Who in their right mind would be able to do what he did in that game?" says former teammate Eric Weddle, one of his best friends in football. "It tells you how much he loves the game. I don't know that I've ever been around a teammate who loves the game as much as he does."

Ask Rivers what he is most proud of in his career, and he will tell you it is that he has not missed a single start since he replaced Drew Brees as the Chargers' starter in 2006, his third season. It has been a most difficult achievement. "Sometimes his ribs would pop out the day of the game or the day before, and he'd be in the most excruciating pain," Weddle says. "He couldn't move. But he'd get it shot up and play."

The NFL record Rivers most reveres belongs to Brett Favre: 297 straight starts. With 194 straight, Rivers is fourth all-time. If he keeps it going, he will move into second place on the list next September. But with much more sand in the bottom half of his hourglass than the top, Rivers concedes the crown will remain Favre's.

Favre is one of eight quarterbacks who have thrown for more yards than Rivers. Peyton Manning's record of 71,940 yards is more than 20,000 yards away. Rivers concedes that record is out of reach as well, especially with active quarterbacks Brees, Brady, Eli Manning and Ben Roethlisberger also ahead of him.

One thing that he does not concede is out of reach is a Super Bowl ring. All the most transcendent quarterbacks of Rivers' era—Brady, Brees, Favre, both Mannings, Aaron Rodgers, Roethlisberger, Kurt Warner and Russell Wilson—have at least one.

It is the only thing missing from Rivers' bio. And as the years pass, that blank space seems to get bigger and bigger.

"It's something we talk about," says Chargers tight end Antonio Gates.

Rivers and Gates have been teammates Rivers' entire career. Gates joined the Chargers one year before Rivers and refers to Rivers as "my baby."

"It would be the stamp on his career and the stamp on my career," Gates says. "When you think about all the greats who played for a long time, you think about the ones who won a Super Bowl ring. That's why you see the fire in him. That's why you see the competitive edge and the drive he has, because that's something he still needs to fulfill."

Rivers will tell you a career is about more than a Super Bowl, though. He points to the teammates he has touched and been touched by: Gates, Weddle, Tomlinson, Kellen Clemens, Malcom Floyd, Nick Hardwick, Jacob Hester and Danny Woodhead. He will tell you he knows he has given his all, so he has nothing to regret.

He does, however, wonder how many more real chances he will have.

"It doesn't eat at me," he says. "As a competitor, it drives you. It's hard to say this without someone saying, 'Golly, he doesn't care that much.' I want to win a championship for our team, for our organization. I want us to win one bad. But do I lose sleep over it? Or would I be miserable one day if I never did it? The answer is no."

Rivers has no scars from the 2006, 2007 and 2009 seasons. He doesn't curse his luck.

He just begins. Again.

"We've had some missed opportunities when we didn't get it done when we should have," Rivers says. "But each and every year, you start new on a climb to try to get to the mountaintop. You push forward and begin again."

Rivers has never attended a Super Bowl. He hopes his first will be as a participant—in Atlanta next February.

There are those who will tell you he has an excellent chance. Analysts Dan Patrick, James Jones and Tomlinson were among many who picked the Chargers to make it to Atlanta. As of Monday, the Chargers had the ninth-best chance of winning the Super Bowl at +2000, per OddsShark.

"Shoot, I think we have a heck of an opportunity," Rivers says. "We got a chance. I like where our team is at."

He likes where he is at, too. In his past nine games, going back to last season, Rivers has a 109.6 passer rating. He has averaged 325.8 passing yards and 13.1 yards per completion in those games. He didn't throw an interception in seven of the nine games.

He will be 37 in December—an age when many quarterbacks are in a state of deterioration. But if he is declining in any way, he's hiding it well. "It doesn't seem like he's aging," Chargers offensive coordinator Ken Whisenhunt says.

Rivers' age may be showing in his demeanor more than in his abilities. He still is one of the more fiery and demonstrative quarterbacks on any given Sunday, but he has more forbearance these days. "I definitely have calmed down," he says. "The emotions have been a little tempered."

More than ever, Rivers seems like he belongs to a previous generation of players. There really isn't anyone like him in his locker room, or even in the league. He uses the word "golly." He has been vocal about his Catholic faith and belief in natural family planning (he and wife Tiffany, his high school sweetheart, have eight children, and he says more are in the plans). His wardrobe would fit in better at a square dance than at a team party.

"He has the worst fashion ever," Weddle says, laughing. "His bolo tie and the old grandpa jacket that probably cost $75. He never buys anything new other than maybe some cowboy boots. That's him. He's not into pleasing people by the way he looks. I respect that."

He looks best when it matters. When he's wearing navy, gold and white, or powder blue, gold and white, depending on the Sunday.

In the autumn of his career, Rivers isn't fighting time. He's going along with it. And he seems to be his best version of himself. "The last half of last year and the beginning of this year, there has been a steadiness, a calmness," he says. "I feel like I'm seeing things good. I'm in a good place mentally with the offense and with what we're trying to get done."

Whisenhunt's offense flatters Rivers, as it once did Warner. And the players around Rivers are bringing out his best.

Rivers has had outstanding skill position players around him before. But he believes he has more useful weapons now than ever.

"When you talk about the skill guys, there's so many," he says. "We have the speed of Travis [Benjamin] and Tyrell [Williams]. Big Mike [Williams] is coming along, doing a nice job. Keenan [Allen], look at the player he has turned into, one of the top guys in the league. We have the tight ends with Gates back in the fold and Virgil Green. The backs Austin [Ekeler] and Melvin [Gordon] complement each other so well. They're both very good runners, but they're great at catching the ball out of the backfield."

"It's such a dynamic group and a versatile group. Who knows who it's going to be any week? They can't just key in on Keenan, or key in on Melvin. That's what makes us dangerous."

If Rivers is better than ever—and so far in 2018, he has career highs in yards per game (340.0), completion percentage (73.1) and rating (119.6), with six touchdowns and only one interception—those players will have something to do with it.

"We have guys who can do multiple things for him," Whisenhunt says. "That allows him to do a lot of different things, which is right in his wheelhouse because he can process and handle all of those things. So I don't think he has been pressing to feel he has to make the play. He knows if this guy is not here, he's got this guy, or he's got that guy."

That's why Rivers feels so good this September.

Gates had been thinking that 2017 would be his last NFL season. The Chargers told him they were moving on. But Rivers texted him throughout the offseason and camp when he was sitting it out, asking him when he was coming back. Finally, he showed up the week before the season began.

He and Rivers wanted to begin again, together. "We have a chance," Gates says. "Let's make the most of it. You never know when it's your last chance. That's how I feel. And that's how he feels."

Somewhere, there is a high school football field. Maybe it's in Alabama, near Rivers' high school. Maybe it's in Southern California.

It's waiting for Rivers. It's calling him.

He has not pinpointed when he will walk away from the NFL, but within five years, he plans on being on that field with a whistle around his neck.

Rivers' oldest son, 10-year-old Gunner, is in fourth grade. He throws the ball with the same motion as his father.

It is Rivers' intent to be Gunner's coach when Gunner gets to high school. "That will give you a range right there," he says in answer to the question about how much longer he will play.

Weddle believes his friend is as excited about coaching high school as he is about playing. Rivers just says: "Brady and those guys keep talking about playing until they are 45. You don't have to worry about me being there then. I can tell you that for sure. I don't want to shut it down too early. But I'm also not into trying to go until it's too late."

Other than Gates, all of his teammates who were contemporaries are gone, most having moved to the next phases of their lives. Even his team has moved, from San Diego to L.A.

When the Chargers headed north last year, Rivers chose to remain in San Diego and commute. He is driven more than an hour each way in a $200,000 SUV/mobile office equipped with a 40-inch screen, satellite television, Wi-Fi and a refrigerator. It's one of the many ways things have changed over time.

Rivers doesn't have to be reminded that the pages of his life are turning faster than ever. His oldest daughter, Halle, is 16. Some of the quarterbacks he's opposing are much closer to her age than his. This season he's already gone against Patrick Mahomes and Josh Allen, both 22, and admired their young arms.

Other next-gen QBs he is scheduled to oppose this year are Goff (23), Jimmy Garoppolo (26), Derek Carr (27), Marcus Mariota (24) and maybe Baker Mayfield (23) and Josh Rosen (21) if they get promotions.

"I don't know that I see it as a changing of the guard," he says. "There are still a lot of us older guys that have some time left. But [Goff] is one of a bunch of young guys that are gonna be around a long time, well after I'm gone." They're just beginning their careers. Rivers is beginning again. But this beginning is special to him.

"I like to think I haven't taken any of it for granted," he says. "But when you are on this backstretch, I've tried to appreciate it more, be more aware. The practice days, the walkthroughs, the bus rides—all those things you can't come back to. When you are getting into Year 15, you think about it. This thing is going to come to an end at some point. I think I am more grateful daily."

There is more at stake for Rivers now than a Lombardi Trophy. There also is the matter of how he will be remembered.

If he wins a Super Bowl late in his career, will he ascend to the level of John Elway in our mind's eye?

If he peters out, will he be thought of as Ken Anderson, a player with flashy statistics who many think was a cut below some others from his generation?

Perhaps the player Rivers will forever be most compared to is Eli Manning, whom the Chargers traded to the Giants for Rivers and two draft picks. Rivers' career has been better than Manning's by many measures, but not by one important one: Manning has two Super Bowl rings.

Quarterbacks are judged by rings. Rivers understands. "It comes with the position," he says. "Head coach and quarterback have a record attached to them. And I have always felt a great responsibility to help lead our team to win games, the division and ultimately the Super Bowl. We haven't been able to accomplish the latter yet. Gonna keep pushing like crazy to get to the mountaintop."

With a Super Bowl ring, Rivers would be a cinch for the Pro Football Hall of Fame. Without one, whether he has done enough is debatable. When Rivers was a boy, he had posters on his wall of Elway, Favre, Troy Aikman, Peyton Manning, Dan Marino and Joe Montana. It would mean something for him to stand on a stage with them, wearing matching jackets. But it would not mean everything.

"I've always watched the Hall of Fame speeches," he says. "Thought about what I would talk about if I ever was up there. But I don't wake up in the morning thinking about wanting to be in the Hall of Fame. I really don't."

He is unencumbered by the weight of what we will think. He has thoughts of his own.

This is how Rivers wants to be remembered: "A guy that played with great passion, could be depended on...was a good teammate...and that would compete 'til the end no matter what the situation," he says.

That's all.

And with that, he is off to replace his ball cap with a helmet, to begin again.

The Mind of Philip Rivers: Explaining the Game Within the Game

By Andy Benoit
Sports Illustrated
June 21, 2018

COSTA MESA, Calif. — Philip Rivers gets out of his chair and starts gesticulating wildly, like he's at the line of scrimmage with the play clock ticking down. We're watching film on my iPad in a lounge outside the Chargers' locker room, and this isn't the first time he's vacated his seat, enthusiasm taking over.

"It's the game within the game that makes it so awesome," he says. "To me, the most fun games are where we get in the no-huddle, we get in kind of a groove and the defense has a Mike linebacker who can go no-huddle with you.

"I remember going against Sean Lee, and it was that. It was that. I checked and he would check. And it was, 'Golly! Hey, reload that.' And he would try to get to something else. That was fun. There's that back and forth and, 'Gosh, you got me here, but now I got you.' I thought he was getting to this, but he got to that.' Those types of games, when there's a guy over there who's in the same mold preparation-wise, study-wise, that's the most fun"

Rivers is in arguably the best position of his career. He's shown no sign of physical decline entering Year 15, when he'll be leading a rising Chargers team that many are picking to win the AFC West. People inside the organization say his passion and football mind are the most impressive they've ever seen, and people outside say that's why he should be regarded as at least the second best QB from that vaunted 2004 class.

We bring up a play from that game against the Cowboys, Thanksgiving 2017. It was the day's fourth snap—well before the no-huddle cat-and-mouse game ensued.

"We're running scissors with [Keenan Allen and Travis Benjamin], which is pretty simple. Dallas played a 2-high coverage with both Quarters and Cover-2 principles. Safety [Jeff Heath's] width suggested we could get Travis over the top on this thing. It was Thanksgiving so we didn't have much time to prepare. But we did talk about whether we might get this coverage. We'd get Travis running right down the middle."

"So, when we lined up, we bring in [running back] Austin Ekeler, it's kinda starting to take shape. I'm going, 'Goodness, gracious, that safety and cornerback, they're communicating. Boy, maybe we're gonna have Travis over the top of this thing.'"

"Because of that, I didn't really hate [getting flushed from the pocket and] having to move right. Certain times you go, 'Gosh, I'm gonna have to sit in here if I wanna throw to Travis on, say, a corner route.' But in this instance it's like, 'Alright, I'm gonna move with it. I think I'm gonna get it.'"

Often with Rivers, a play like this is just a byproduct of presnap preparation.

"First thing, and it's really one of my favorite things, is the protection part. Who everybody is blocking and where the pressure is coming from.

Because if we can't get the ball off, it doesn't matter what you're doing out here. There wasn't a lot to this particular one." With only three defensive linemen on the field, "we had to decide, 'How do we want to treat this? Do you treat this like four downlinemen or like four downlinemen? [That decision] totally changes your calling, changes where you're zoning and where your man-blocking side and all that stuff is. So here, I go 'Oh shoot', if [LB No. 57, Damien Wilson] had No. 92 on his jersey, we wouldn't be having to communicate so much, right? (He'd just look like one of four downlinemen—pretty simple.) "But instead we had to make the call, 'Hey, 57 is down.'"

Then Rivers called running back Austin Ekeler into the formation so he could chip-block stud defensive end DeMarcus Lawrence.

I ask Rivers if a chip-block must always be built into the play as an option, or if he can just call for it once he sees things at the line of scrimmage.

"Oh, sure, you can call it yourself. I can say 'Hey, chip him and run your sneak route.' Or I may tell the tight end, 'Hey, give that defensive end a little bit on your way out.'"

It works because that tight end or running back is usually the checkdown option. It's O.K. if a checkdown receiver waits an extra second before releasing into his route because those routes only travel a short distance and don't often occur on a strict timing-and-rhythm schedule.

This understanding is part of why Rivers, along with Tom Brady, is the best checkdown passer in the NFL. That might seem small, but it's not. Checkdowns turn incompletions into gains—and sometimes substantial games.

"[Former coaches of Rivers] Cam Cameron and Norv Turner coached the heck out of that," says Rivers. "Both of them liked deep shots and chunk plays, but they always said, 'Tailback! Don't forget your tailback. Tailback!' That was ingrained in me early. It's a short throw, long run a lot of times.

"We played Baltimore a few years ago. Elvis Dumervil was there. We got to a point in the game where [running back] Danny Woodhead just made sure he was on Dumervil's side wherever he was.

"It was funny. One time, Danny came over and Dumervil went to the other side. So Danny follows him back over to that side. Dumervil says to me, 'Can I just get one?' I said, 'No, all day you're gonna get chipped!'"

For the next play, we pull up another long completion against a two-deep safety look: Keenan Allen's 50-yard catch near the end of the Week 4 Eagles game.

"Keenan's so good at these in-cuts," Rivers says. "It's just a high-low. Hunter Henry's sitting here to [occupy linebacker Jordan Hicks], then we have the shallow route coming underneath Hicks. "My eyes go on 23 [safety Rodney McLeod]. Is he gonna slough off here and make me throw the shallow route to Tyrell Williams? Or is he just driving on the in-breaking route? If he drives, you think, 'All right, I got room to lay this around him.'"

McLeod leaves his zone and drives so hard on Henry's route that he practically busts the coverage. Rivers waits and hits Allen on the wide-open in-breaker. "I like to complete these in-routes out wider than this normally. Because you're not quite sure what you got back in the secondary."

It looked like Quarters coverage (aka Cover 4), with each defensive back taking a fourth of the field, but McLeod's aggression suggests it may have been something else.

"So it's funny you say that because this coverage has gotten more popular in the last four of five years," Rivers explains. "We would call this 9-Buzz. For us, 9 means Cover 3 to the weak side." In other words, it starts out looking like Cover 4, with both safeties deep. But when the safety on the side away from the tight end rotates down, it becomes Cover 9.

"This coverage is coming in, a lot of teams are playing it," Rivers says. "Kansas City plays it, our guys play it. And it does have a Cover 4 element to it, especially if you run three vertical routes, because then McLeod is gonna stay deep to defend that. By moving, he's kind of that buzz safety as we call him. He kind of becomes a robber in there."

For the last play, I ask Rivers to choose between a deep completion to Tyrell Williams from earlier in the Eagles game or his red zone interception to safety Darian Thompson in Week 5 against the Giants.

"Oh, yeah. I threw it right to him," Rivers says. "Let's do that one."

We pull it up.

"So this is Cover 4. Going into the game we knew that they do that and it was just a matter of executing."

"We have to be aware of the backside safety [Landon Collins]. As the X-receiver [Tyrell Williams] is running the shallow, that safety now has no threat vertically. So now this safety knows, 'Gosh, I gotta help on Antonio Gates down the middle.' Whereas let's say Tyrell's running a corner route, that would hold Collins a little more. [Which means] Thompson may have to be a little more occupied by the tight end who's caught 112 career touchdowns." Rivers points to Gates and smiles. "But Thompson feels his buddy Collins coming to get Gates, so Thompson can now fall off and take Keenan Allen."

I thought maybe the linebacker carrying Gates down the middle is what freed up Thompson. "Yes, he's carrying him, but he's dead to me," Rivers says. "This Mike linebacker's dead."

You would be comfortable throwing to Gates even with that linebacker smothering him?

"Oh, yeah. Oh, yeah. High and around in the back end zone. You like your chances on that."

We see Rivers throw for Allen and Thompson intercept it.

"This is just lack of execution on my part. Right now, I should be throwing to Williams. And this is the sort of thing we talk about; after the game, [offensive coordinator] Ken Whisenhunt and Shane Steichen, our quarterback coach, we said to each other, 'We should know when the backside safety is going to push over to help inside,' and we did know." To prevent Collins from helping over the middle, the Chargers could have kept Williams on some sort of vertical route on Collins's side of the field.

In Rivers's mind, Collins's tendency to help inside is as much about Collins as it is the Giants' scheme. "More than 'Oh, that's Cover 4 and that's 9-Buzz, or that's that,' it's about, 'How does this guy play it?"

"It's attacking specific opponents and getting a feel for their body language and their movements. Because some people will tell you 'Well, that concept wouldn't be good versus that coverage.' But you go, 'Yeah, but it's going to be good versus this GUY.' Because we know what he's seen, and he knows how we do it. So, gosh, let's set him up. Let's invite him to think, 'Here this comes. They really think they're gonna be able to throw this in here?'" Rivers smiles again. "We want you to think that."

Rayshawn Jenkins is not angry, and that is some kind of wonderful

By Jeff Pearlman
The Athletic
August 14, 2018

COSTA MESA, Calif.—When Rayshawn Jenkins was 12, he liked to walk house to house near his family's home in St. Petersburg, Fla., knock and see if anyone answered. Then, if no one did, he would lift back his leg and—BAM!—kick the door in. Young Rayshawn wasn't seeking out food or money. He wasn't trying to take someone's DVDs or CDs. He just thought it was fun. So he'd smash a door, move on to the next house, knock, smash that door. On and on.

Rayshawn also enjoyed lighting cherry bombs and throwing them through the open windows of the homes of people he didn't know. The explosions were electrifying. The screams were reaffirming. He equally dug coming up behind a stranger and smashing him (or her) in the back of the skull with an egg. Because, hey, who doesn't relish smashing people in the skull with eggs?

Mostly, Rayshawn liked fighting. No, he loved fighting. In the James Park Apartments where he grew up on the city's crime-infested south side, throwing punches was akin to breathing and walking. He'd wake every morning wondering, literally, "Who will I hit today?" And a solid 60 percent of the time, thoughts became reality.

Rayshawn punched tall kids. Short kids. Older kids. Younger kids. Bullies. Once, he ran home from a nearby basketball court to tell his mother, Terry Byrd, that two of his siblings were involved in a fight. Without so much as flinching, Terry — enraged that her boy dashed from violence — slipped on her sneakers and marched.

Rayshawn back to the scene. She stepped into the middle of a circle of onlookers and said, calmly but with purpose, "This is my son. He'll fight anyone here."

Rayshawn was 12 and smallish. An older kid, 13 or 14, walked to the center, fists up.

"He was much bigger," says Rayshawn. "I destroyed him."

If all this seems unusual or abnormal to you, it doesn't to Rayshawn Jenkins. Even now, sitting on the Los Angeles Chargers' practice field on a recent sunny afternoon in Southern California, the second-year free safety — as gracious and accommodating as any professional athlete you might encounter — looks dumbfounded when I mention that neither my dad nor mom ever beat the living shit out of me.

"Not with a belt?" he asks.

No.

"A paddle?"

No.

"Damn," he says.

"Damn."

This is not the Rayshawn Jenkins story that's supposed to be written.

That Rayshawn Jenkins story — the one repeatedly spun during his five years at the University of Miami, and now as a professional — is the simple-yet-fun saga of a successful football player with 17 (yes, seventeen) brothers and sisters. And, in the name of writer-reader transparency, it's the reason I initially came to Chargers camp two weeks ago, to talk to Los Angeles' gregarious defensive back about being raised in some sort of Brady Bunch carnival mirror. So I sat down across from Rayshawn and opened with, "Can you name all of your siblings in age order?"

"Of course," he replied, still wearing a blue jersey with No. 25 in white letters. Then, after a slight pause and a sip of water from a black bottle — "There's Shomira, Charles, Ashanti, Chaniece, Arkeith, me, Charlisha, Elise, Keyon, Shay, Jontae, Alexis, Jaleyah, Kevary, Ronald, Soraya, Caira and ... and um ... eh ... ah ... Camora! Yes, Camora!"

The stuff was irresistible, and it would be easy for a scribe to smile, nod, follow with two or three more questions ("What's your wackiest memory?"), then transition to Philip Rivers or Joey Bosa or Jenkins' development as he approaches his sophomore season with the Chargers. That's pretty much what we do in 2018 — quick tales, neatly wrapped and ribboned into tweets. That's also how the NFL likes it. No mess. Just shiny helmets and smiling faces and big men signing autographs for their loyal, decked-out-in-$40-team-T-shirt fans.

Only Rayshawn Jenkins' rags-to-riches story is messy. It's not the cute and snuggly saga of a boy growing up with his siblings in bunk beds, dressing as Warrick

Dunn for Halloween and gathering around the Christmas tree to sing "Jingle Bells" as presents are passed from adult to child.

No.

Rayshawn Sharodd Jenkins was born on Jan. 25, 1994, at Bayfront Health St. Petersburg, a stone's throw from his parents' small home on Eighth Avenue. At the time, Charles Jenkins and Terry Byrd were living together — a young, unstable, sorta-kind-of-not-really-in-love couple (he was 21, she was 20) who met a few years earlier at a nightclub. Charles arrived in the relationship with three children (son Charles, daughters Ashanti and Chaniece), and Terry already had a 2-year-old daughter, Shomira. Together, they produced a son, Arkeith, a year before Rayshawn arrived. "Look, I come from a big family," says Charles, who worked as a cook at a nearby Howard Johnson's. "My mom had three kids, my dad had nine kids. It's just how it went."

The product of an African-American father and Native American mother, Terry was known for walking here to there and there to here with a pronounced chip on her shoulder. At 5-foot-7 and 212 pounds, she was a stout woman with a murderous scowl, piercing brown eyes and a hair-trigger temper. She said little but emitted a warning that silently screamed Step off. One knew not to fuck with Terry Byrd. One knew not to think of fucking with Terry Byrd. "Never," says Rayshawn. "It wouldn't end well."

Nine months after Rayshawn's birth, Terry was arrested and charged with aggravated assault with a weapon. She did no jail time, had another child with Charles (daughter Charlisha), then was sentenced to three years at the Jefferson Correctional Institution following a 1996 arrest for aggravated battery with a deadly weapon. Though Terry declined to speak with The Athletic, her family members confirm the arrest had to do with stabbing someone with a knife. "She's crazy," says Charles.

"I've got like four cuts on me from her."

Terry delivered the couple's fourth child, a girl named Elise, as inmate No. 548169. During the incarceration, Rayshawn's parents ended their relationship, and the children split their time living with their father and an aunt and uncle. Then, when Terry was released on March 3, 1999, they moved with her to a small unit within James Park, a Section 8 community of approximately 150 apartments that was overrun by drugs and violence. She found a job doing telemarketing, and her five children, well ...

"We lived unusual lives," says Elise.

According to Rayshawn, he and his siblings slept on the floor and survived largely on a diet of hot dogs, instant ramen and macaroni and cheese. He insists that Terry wasn't a purposefully bad mother, rather a young and immature woman on her own trying to steer her children through a rough-and-tumble world. "Mom," he insists, "did what she knew." That's why, he says, she would regularly punch, kick and whip her offspring. Elise says her mother gave her "at least" six black eyes.

Charlisha says she still has blank patches on her scalp from the swaths of hair Terry ripped out in moments of rage. In certain circumstances, Terry would have her children lie down, then — in shoes — stand on top of them. To inflict pain. "I don't care what words people rely on," says Charlisha. "It wasn't tough love. It was child abuse." Rayshawn says his mother would use one of three items to batter him and his brother and sisters — a switch, a broom or an extension cord. (Charlisha adds that, on occasion, she would also utilize the plastic rod from the window blinds.) "It wasn't like we could make the choice," he says. "She decided."

If Terry found out Rayshawn misbehaved, she liked to — he recalls — wait it out. He might come home from school, tiptoeing through the front door in anticipation of viciousness. Instead, haunting silence. Inevitably, after a few hours passed, he would slip into the bathroom for an evening shower. "Midway through Mom comes in, holding the extension cord," he says. "She's in there with the cord. You're wet, completely naked, and she's swinging away. It hurts so much more. And your skin is breaking. And she's hitting you hard."

One might think these stories are told through tears or gritted teeth. They are not. As he speaks, Rayshawn is laughing, giggling. So is Elise, now 21 and an amateur boxer. It's sort of weird and sort of confusing, and neither seems to understand the optics. "If I was hit, I deserved to be hit," Rayshawn says. "I caused it. I wasn't listening." They are basking in the sun following another Chargers practice, two young, good-looking, inquisitive and intelligent siblings spinning yarns as if they were glorious sagas of long-ago trophies and chocolate cake. Perhaps this is the byproduct of time elapsed and life working out. Perhaps, as Charliisa suggests via phone from Hampton University, where she is a senior sociology major and member of the women's basketball team, it's more suppressed memories. Whatever the case, the juxtaposition of past nightmare and modern joy is a peculiar one. "You can't let things consume you," Elise says. "We all have our histories. The best you can do is try and learn, right?"

Between the ages of 6 and 12, Rayshawn attended six elementary schools. Twice, he was kicked out for throwing desks at his teachers. A third time, he was booted for fighting. He is asked why he was so angry, and he shrugs. Literally, the braids atop his head do a slight wiggle as Rayshawn Jenkins' shoulders shrug. "It's just all I knew," he says.

Oftentimes, in the corners of James Park, he and his siblings brawled side by side with their mother. "She would hit the other mom," Rayshawn says. "We'd take out the lady's kids." On three different occasions, he and his siblings were removed from Terry's watch and moved to foster care. On three different occasions, Rayshawn Jenkins was picked up by the police for fleeing.

"We had this fantasy," Rayshawn recalls. "There was a small fan that you'd plug into the wall. We'd put it on the back of a shopping cart and we imagined the fan would blow the shopping cart and we'd be in it. The fan would somehow blow us away." He was 8 when he discovered football.

Rayshawn Jenkins had moved across town to live with his dad, who could either be found working as a cook at Eckerd College, volunteering as a local football coach or procreating. By now, Charles had fathered four additional offspring (he has 14 total children by nine women), but he saw something unique in Rayshawn.

"His mom kept him isolated in the apartment, so he hadn't done sports," he says. "But when you put Rayshawn on a field he would run and run and run. Fast."

Gary Roland, Charles' former classmate at Boca Ciega High, was the head coach of the Silver Raiders, a football program for 8- to 10-year-olds in the Pinellas Youth Football League. He remembers the initial sight of little Rayshawn, scraggly and long-limbed, standing atop the grass at Coquina Key Park. Roland had his operation down — at the start of the season, before even touching a football, the kids needed to learn discipline. So he'd have them line up into a straight line, then do it again. And again. "It takes forever," he says, laughing.

Once the task was completed, Roland ordered the youngsters to bear crawl from line to fence. And that's when it hit him. "Rayshawn bear crawled faster than people run," he says. "I was shocked. Shocked! I'd never seen anything like it." Roland pulled the boy aside and asked how he learned to move with such velocity. Sixteen years later, the reply sticks with him. "My mom," he said, "doesn't allow us to run in the house."

In his two years with the Silver Raiders, Rayshawn went from sports ignoramus to a bolt of electricity. He could throw the ball like a bullet. He could dash like a small Billy Sims. His hands were cushions, and he hit with pulverizing brutality. Little did Roland know, he was coaching a Who's Who of future standouts. Along with Rayshawn, the Silver Raider roster included Shaquem and Shaquill Griffin (both now with the Seattle Seahawks), David Jones (a defensive back recently cut by the Patriots), Michael Clark (the recently retired Packers wide receiver), Isaiah Wynn (a Patriots offensive lineman) and Marquez Valdes-Scantling (a Packers wide receiver). "The team was ridiculous," Roland says. "We were stacked."

Jenkins didn't merely enjoy football. He craved it, dreamed of it, lived for it. Once, in the days leading up to a game, Rayshawn got in trouble at school, and Charles gave him a choice — miss kickoff or take a butt whupping. Without so much as a pause, Rayshawn took the butt whupping. "I had to play," he says.

When Rayshawn aged out of the Silver Raiders, he transitioned to the Lakewood Junior Spartans, another youth team also coached by Roland. The field was a place where the forbidden violence of the real world could be substituted with the approved violence of a game. No one was jumping you on a football field or whipping you with an extension cord. There were no knives or switches. On the football field, Rayshawn wasn't fighting for a bed (as he had done at his father's house) or apprehensively turning the corner of a street, half expecting to be punched in the face. It was a place of positive reinforcement where people (gaspl) actually cheered you. "Many of these kids just heard how bad they were — over and over," says Roland. "That's toxic. They needed to know they were succeeding."

Roland regularly picked Rayshawn up for practice, then drove him home afterward. On multiple occasions, Rayshawn reached his father's house, opened the car door and began to cry. "I love my dad," he says. "But it was just ... everything. Football was my escape from life."

In a perfect world, Jenkins' embrace of football would coincide with a dropoff in day-to-day violence. He did not, however, reside in a perfect world. He lived with his father for a year, then returned to James Park apartment J1 to be with his mother from ages 9 through 14. He continued to find himself fighting at the bus stop, fighting in the hallways of Riviera Middle School. Looking back, he says his biggest problem was an unwillingness to let things roll off his shoulders. Jenkins hated being reprimanded or embarrassed. He viewed both as affronts to his still-in-development manhood and routinely snapped without pause. His mother had never been one to turn the other cheek and, Elise says, "Rayshawn is a lot of our mom. That intensity."

Perhaps that's why he roamed the neighborhood, busting in doors. ("I still don't understand why," he says. "Why would you break someone's door? I was just bad.

It's embarrassing.") And perhaps that explains the cherry bombs ("One time a cop caught me about to throw one," he recalls. "He came up from behind and said, 'Stop or I'll taze you.' The officer put me in the back of his car, talked to me and let me go."). Jenkins was lashing out at a society he didn't understand; football was the lone refuge from an ever-mounting wave of hopelessness. Though his family is one of the largest in St. Petersburg (a local newspaper once did a feature on the sheer volume of Jenkinsses walking the earth), no one had ever attended college. Most failed to graduate from high school. Everywhere he looked, Rayshawn saw people either turning toward crime or standing behind the counter at a local McDonald's, listlessly flipping burgers and filling cups with Coca-Cola. "You have to understand, we never thought there was anything after high school," says Elise. "Because in the hood there's nowhere to go and nobody going there."

Then, the military called.

Military school.

In 2006, Admiral Farragut Academy, a self-professed "military style school" in St. Petersburg, hired Roland to serve as an assistant to Chris Miller, the head football coach whose teams had failed to win a game in two years. Roland says he accepted the position on the condition that he could bring some of his players with him.

They would need financial assistance, of course, and Farragut was willing.

Roland will never forget the sheer fish-out-of-water preposterousness of Jenkins' initial visit to the sprawling campus. The school maintains an enrolled population of approximately 450 students, nearly all white. Uniforms are required. Orders are given. When Rayshawn arrived, he sported multiple tattoos and braids that hung to his mid-chest. He didn't want to be there; sure as hell didn't want to cut his hair (as the school would require).

And yet ...

"It was a real opportunity," he says. "Even I could see that."

Hair reduced to a buzz cut, Rayshawn moved back in with his dad at the start of ninth grade (although Charles has fathered 14 children, the majority lived with their mothers), and the 25-minute drive to Farragut was akin to ditching a Motel 6 for the Ritz-Carlton. Jenkins had never seen anything like Farragut. Kids pulling up in Porsches and Maseratis, talking about their summer trips to London and Paris, about their internships. "I hadn't even left the state," he says. "I barely knew you could leave the state." At Farragut, nobody was waiting to beat you up. Bushes and trees were manicured. Pathways were sparkling clean. On one of his first days, however, a classmate referred to him as a "n—," and — Rayshawn being Rayshawn — he proceeded to punch the offender in the nose and knock him out. What ensued was a lengthy meeting with Jenkins, Roland and a school administrator, who said that while he empathized with Rayshawn's plight, he couldn't expel every student who uttered the n-word.

"Why is that?" Roland asked, his emotions boiling over with rage.

"Because," he was told, "the African-American students use it more than anyone."

Hmm.

"I had been ready to go to war," Roland recalls. "But I thought he made a great point, and the word was abolished from the school for everyone."

For the first time, Rayshawn found himself surrounded by serious people doing serious work. While he was an eighth-grader at Riviera Middle School, a student threw another student in front of a moving bus — and it was barely news. At Farragut, teachers were supportive and engaged. Classmates had big plans — college, grad school, careers. During his sophomore year, he went on a weeklong class ski trip to Squaw Valley in California's Sierra Nevada mountains. It was his first time on an airplane, as well as his first time on skis. Both were loves at first sight. "I've skied four times since," he says. "That's how much I liked it."

Always known to be smart and inquisitive, Rayshawn was an A and B student. He embraced the structure and discipline. It felt special. Righteous. Before long he wasn't merely the best athlete on campus, but one of the more popular students. It's amazing what can happen when a young man isn't always on guard. "One thing I can tell you is no one ever questioned his intelligence," says Roland. "That's a legitimately intelligent person."

A member of the Blue Jackets' track and football teams, Jenkins emerged as one of the region's elite athletes. As a senior in 2011, he won state titles in the 100- and 300-meter hurdles, then was named the Tampa Bay Times' Offensive Player of the Year. Despite missing six games with a fractured rib, he ran for 994 yards, including 714 in four playoff games. In an opening-round contest against Fort Myers Evangelical Christian, Jenkins rushed for a school-record 356 yards. He played every imaginable position — quarterback, halfback, wide receiver, defensive back — and the team reached the Class 2A state championship game. Yet despite the success, and despite the myriad scholarship offers, he still needed ... something. The pull of the streets is strong and, often, unforgiving. Jenkins wanted to succeed. But coming from a world where that wasn't defined in the clichéd terms (white-collar job, grassy yard surrounding a house, nice automobile), what did it all mean?

Then, an answer. In the late months of 2011, Jenkins received a text message from his cousin, Carl Lee Martin. Just 15 at the time, Carl was a regular participant in a basketball-and-faith outreach program at the nearby Campbell Park Recreation Center. Yet, like many in the area, he couldn't fully avoid trouble, and he had recently been charged with robbery. While the case was dropped, Martin appeared shaken. He had watched his cousin's athletic successes with tremendous pride and told Rayshawn — via DM — that his glory inspired him to aim higher.

"I still have the message in my inbox," Jenkins says. "He said he wanted to be like me. That he wanted to go to college, get out of the hood and do better. I know he meant it."

On the night of Dec. 22, Martin and five friends stole a minivan and drove it toward St. Pete Beach. En route, Montray Lovett, 18, accidentally fired a .40-caliber handgun from the back seat and hit Martin in the torso. Police were called, and when they arrived in an alley behind 626 23rd Ave., Martin's body lay lifeless, slumped over a back seat inside the vehicle.

Upon receiving the news of his cousin's passing, Jenkins broke down. Sure, young death was something you heard about in the hood. But it had never directly impacted Rayshawn. Certainly had never touched his family.

"It's different when it happens to someone you're close with," he says. "It opens your eyes. It awakens you." You need to meet the girlfriend.

Everyone insists on this. Meet the girlfriend, and you'll understand who the man has become. Meet the girlfriend and you'll understand the sense of tranquility.

So I met the girlfriend.

And they're right.

Emily Lillard, at first glance, seems to be everything Rayshawn Jenkins is not. Beyond the physically obvious (she's white and blonde) are the geographically and socially obvious. Namely, Lillard hails from Overland Park, Kansas (motto: "Above and Beyond, by Design"), and was raised by parents who expected their daughter to attend college, just as they had. "If you don't graduate, it's weird to them," says Rayshawn. "It's what you do."

The two arrived at the University of Miami in 2012 — Rayshawn as a highly touted incoming freshman football player, Emily as a sophomore transfer from the University of Arkansas, where she starred as a goaltender on the women's soccer team. At first, it was a friendship. Then a close friendship. Then romance. Jenkins and Lillard bonded as athletes (Emily was one of America's top netminders in her three years as a Hurricane), as well as athletes with quick triggers. During his first two semesters at Miami, Rayshawn was assigned an anger management therapist by the coaching staff. They would meet three times per week for hour-long sessions — "Just to talk and work things out," he says. "I hated it." Like Rayshawn, Emily fought to control her temper. "I used to be a very angry person," she says. "We needed to calm down." They helped each other by, in large part, being there for each other. People tended to judge Rayshawn by his looks (the braids, the tattoos) and past reputation.

They saw him on the field — punishing tackler, endless trash talk — and presumed the worst. Emily, though, believed that beyond the scowl and hardened exterior was a gentle soul itching to express himself. That impression was reinforced during never-ending dialogues. For the first time, Jenkins was trusting another person with his feelings. He could talk to Emily and not feel judged. He wasn't embarrassed in front of her. He didn't worry about being ridiculed. "Rayshawn wants to be a good person in every situation," she says. "He's actually very quiet and caring. You just had to look for it."

As had been the case at Farragut, Jenkins had to adjust to Miami. And vice versa. The Hurricanes were coached by Al Golden, and at times the staff judged their young safety to be lazy and irrational. "He was always a good kid, a smart kid," says Paul Williams, the former Miami defensive backs coach who now holds the same position at Houston. "But you have to remember, kids from the hood aren't used to the environment. They're thrown into something so new and so different. To expect them to just adjust is crazy. They need time. Rayshawn needed time."

Jenkins started 12 games at safety as a sophomore, redshirted the next year with a back injury, then morphed as a junior and senior into one of America's elite defensive backs. He wore uniform No. 26 in honor of Sean Taylor, the former Hurricanes safety who had been shot and killed in 2007, and in many ways, he played like him. Yes, Jenkins was a pulverizing hitter. But he was also the quickest study in the room. When a coach explained something once, it never had to be said again.

If one moment exemplifies the man he became, it took place in the leadup to his final year with the Hurricanes. Golden had been fired and replaced by Mark Richt, and many within the program wondered how the perceived-to-be-volatile safety would respond to new voices, new directives.

During a defensive team meeting, Ephraim Banda, the first-year safeties coach, called Jenkins out in front of the entire room. He tore into Jenkins' technique, his body language, his approach. "You need to do better!" Banda said. "I don't like what I'm seeing!"

Afterward, the safety tapped the coach on the shoulder.

"Thank you," Jenkins said, smiling. "I needed to hear that."

We are sitting by a pool at the Marriott in Irvine — the Chargers' training camp hotel. It's a gorgeous evening. Soft breeze. Palm trees billowing in the wind. Every afternoon a maid comes to clean his room. The pillow is white and soft. The television is a flat screen.

Again — Rayshawn Jenkins is eating shrimp.

He thinks about this all the time; about the journey and the improbability. "Every morning I pray," he says. "For everything that's happened."

When the Chargers used a fourth-round pick on him in the 2017 draft, many friends and family members were overcome by emotion. His dad, who never cries, cried.

His siblings, who have too few reasons to beam, beamed. The outpouring of love wasn't specifically about NFL paychecks or televised glory. No, it was about a kid from the projects of St. Petersburg defying every possible odd to make it. It was about changing the path for his 12 younger siblings, who had tangible proof that hard work and doggedness could equal success.

"He was the first to go to college, and you better believe that inspired me to go to college, too," says Charlisha, one of seven siblings who followed Rayshawn to Farragut. "I don't know how many people can fully understand what we've gone through. It was ugly. But he's rearranged the future for us."

When practices end, Jenkins heads down Southern California to a home he shares with Emily, their 2-year-old son, Ace, and a pit bull, Nike. Rayshawn, Emily says, is the most playful father you will ever see — loving and engaged and uniquely positive. “If someone is the discipliner,” she laughs, “it’s me.”

On the one hand, Rayshawn never forgets the lessons of his childhood. The sound of an extension cord tearing into moist flesh is not an echo that fades easily. And yet, he is not haunted by the past. He talks with both of his parents semi-regularly. He holds no grudges. Doesn’t even see a reason to hold a grudge.

Rayshawn Jenkins is eating shrimp and playing professional football.

He is anything but angry.

Competing is a family trait for Miami Hurricanes’ Rayshawn Jenkins

With a father who is a Hurricanes legend and two older brothers who played college football, fifth-year senior safety A.J. Highsmith knows it’s not easy to grab the spotlight among a family of talented athletes.

So he doesn’t envy the position teammate Rayshawn Jenkins is in. The sophomore safety out of St. Petersburg comes from a family of 16 children — more than a few of whom are budding young sports stars themselves.

“I come from a family of five, and I don’t even think I have 16 friends,” Highsmith joked after a recent spring practice.

“I’m pretty sure that’s where he got that hunger to compete. Being one of 16 you’ve got no choice.”

Charles Jenkins, father to Rayshawn and 12 of his other siblings, has two sons playing high school football; a daughter, Charlisa, a 6-1 sophomore forward who was among the leading scorers in Pinellas County this past season; and a 10-year-old son Kevary, who scored 30 touchdowns last season in Pop Warner football.

But Rayshawn, who once shared a room with three brothers (he said they alternated daily who would sleep on the bed and who would sleep on the floor), is the biggest family star at the moment. And once you get Mr. Jenkins talking about his fourth child, he doesn’t stop until he talks about the talents of all his children.

“My daughter is a good one — she’s going down with her AAU team to Miami. Hopefully she gets to meet [UM women’s basketball coach] Katie Meier,” said Jenkins, who runs a tattoo shop and a T-shirt business that has contracts with many of the high schools in the Tampa-St. Pete area — just enough income, he says, to feed and care for all of his kids.

“[UM offensive line coach] Art Kehoe already gave my 10-year-old his business card and told him he’d be back for him soon. He’s just like Rayshawn was growing up — a do-it-all threat and a good student, too. For me, it’s all about raising these kids, keeping them out of trouble and giving them hope.”

Rayshawn, a state champion hurdler who played offense, defense and special teams at tiny Admiral Farragut Academy when he was in high school, is the one providing the example to his siblings that with hard work dreams can come true, his father said.

After coming on late in the season last year and finishing with 27 tackles and an interception (at USF in front of his family and friends).

Jenkins, 6-1, 215 pounds, has continued to run with the first team during the spring alongside Highsmith and fellow sophomore Deon Bush and impressed coaches with his continued growth.

Jenkins, who gave up a 99-yard touchdown pass in the season-ending win over Duke because he had a miscommunication with cornerback Brandon McGee, said his goal this spring has been making sure he’s in the right spot all the time.

“I got myself better conditioned so we won’t be that team that dies out in the fourth quarter,” Jenkins said. “I’m working on breaks, getting smarter at the game. I’m glad I played last year because I really know what to expect. As far as coming out and tackling and reading certain formations, I can do that.”

Jenkins wasn’t wearing a black jersey — designated for starters/team leaders during practice Tuesday. But he and Bush have worn them at times during camp according to defensive backs coach Paul Williams, who adds “Rayshawn has got the tools, the traits, but we got to clean his game up as far as running the show, being more consistent.”

In addition to packing on 15 pounds of muscle in the offseason, Jenkins has also increased his bench press “40 to 50 pounds” and is now lifting 325 pounds regularly. He said when he and his teammates were tested with the Combine weight of 225 pounds he produced 17 reps, a vast improvement from his freshman year and currently tops among the defensive backs. Jenkins’ squat numbers have also gone up 40 pounds to 390.

Last year Jenkins ran the 40-yard dash in 4.51 seconds. Jenkins said he expects to be faster — even with the added weight — when he’s tested again after the spring.

“Very gifted raw talent,” UM coach Al Golden said of Jenkins. “He’s an explosive player that can play big.”

Jenkins also changed another number this spring — his jersey — from 29 to 26, the number once worn by the late great Sean Taylor.

“He always admired Sean Taylor and the work he put in,” Charles Jenkins said. “Rayshawn told me when that number came open this season he wanted it because he wanted to make it great again.”

Highsmith said he believes Jenkins can be special once he puts it together.

“It’s a lot to live up to,” Highsmith said of wearing Taylor’s number. “But he knows what goes into it, and I think he can hold his own. Before, you had to wonder if Rayshawn was going to be in the right spot to make the plays. Now he understands where to be and where to fit to make the play. It’s just a matter of time with him.”
