Inman Funeral Home Is Prepared to Safely Care For Families During the COVID-19 Pandemic

Inman Funeral Home remains committed and prepared to safely care for the families it serves during the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic.

At Inman Funeral Home we recognize our responsibility to protect the health of those we are privileged to serve. I will continue to guide families in ways they can meaningfully commemorate the life of their loved one, while adhering to the guidance issued by federal, state and local public health officials.

I remain vigilant about cleaning the facilities and ensuring we're all following recommended healthy habits, such as staying home when sick, washing our hands, and covering coughs and sneezes. The CDC and our state and local public health officials have offered a lot of helpful guidance for businesses on this topic, which we continue to follow.

The Kansas Funeral Directors Association recommends that we continue to keep attendance at a minimum and as close to 10 as possible. This is to protect my staff, families and the public. Limiting attendance to immediate family if possible, will help allow for social distancing. We can have a private family service, livestreamed on our social media or we can do a burial with a memorial service at a later date.

A member of the National Funeral Directors Association (NFDA), Athena Johnson regularly receives information via NFDA from the CDC, Department of Health and Human Services and other agencies about the evolution of COVID-19 in the United States. NFDA continues to lead the conversation with federal officials about the role of funeral service as it relates to the COVID-19 pandemic.

We all know with COVID-19, things change day to day. Please feel free to call me, Athena Johnson, at 620-712-1940 if you have any questions.
