BHV Celebrates Its 15th Anniversary with Atul Gawande

BY SUZANNE BESSER and LAURA CONNORS

Dr. Atul Gawande and NPR Correspondent Robin Young on stage at the Boston Public Library.

WHEN RENOWNED SURGEON AND AUTHOR Dr. Atul Gawande agreed to help Beacon Hill Village celebrate our 15th Anniversary, a planning team quickly jumped into action. What would we ask him to talk about? How could we turn this into a celebration of the village movement that began with the founding of BHV?

The culmination of nearly a year of planning resulted in a timely, thoughtful conversation between Dr. Gawande and NPR's Robin Young, attended by more than 300 people at the Boston Public Library on September 25th. It was well worth the long wait from February, when the event was originally scheduled to be held but was postponed due to a forecasted snowstorm.

The author, who has written on topics ranging from the value of checklists in improving outcomes to aging and dying, discussed his views on the value of choice and community as we grow older. Villages, he said, are making the connections to the resources we want – not what others say we should have.

The village movement is “changing the way we look at aging.” “The secret of being able to have a good life all the way to the very end is being able to choose our own paths...[and] to be the author of our own lives and make them meaningful. And villages are demonstrating that even if we need help in our later years, we don't have to give up on the purposes in our lives – we don't have to give up on growing, on joy, and on participating in the world.” The village movement couldn't ask for a better advocate than Dr. Gawande.

Villages are making the connections to the resources we want – not what others say we should have.

In addition to the sold-out crowd at the Boston Public Library, more than 7,000 village members across the country and around the world tuned in to the live event. Villages in more than 180 communities as far away as Alaska and New Zealand participated via webcast and came together virtually as one community to celebrate 15 years of the village movement.

The eloquent Gawande sums it up this way: “Villages are the Sherpas up the mountain of aging ... and why would we not want that along the way?” ■

From the Executive Director

Dear BHV Members:

AS PART OF BHV'S 15TH ANNIVERSARY event (see page 1), Dr. Atul Gawande generously agreed to sit for a taped interview with NPR's Robin Young following the main event. During that interview, he described villages as "the Sherpas up the mountain of aging." His statement created for me a powerful image of how BHV and villages around the world help people navigate the journey of growing older.

Members of Ashby Village in Berkeley, California watching the conversation live, via webcast.

And in a recent interview with Boston Magazine (November 2017 issue), Dr. Gawande echoed a theme he shared with us during our anniversary celebration: that well-being is larger than being healthy and the secret to living a good life to the end is being able to choose our own pathways and being the authors of our own lives.

This vision is exactly what our founders had in mind when they launched Beacon Hill Village in January 2002. Together, they were determined to design their own future – to create their own pathways.

For 15 years, BHV members have been connecting with each other and working together to define what "well-being" means to each of them as individuals and collectively as a community. They – not someone else – decide what activities, programs and support they need and want for an independent, vibrant and meaningful life.

Today, more than 350 open and developing villages around the world are helping their nearly 40,000 members up the "mountain of aging."

Here's to working together, as one village – one community – for the next 15 years.

Warm regards,
Laura Connors

Ina Jaffe Visits Beacon Hill Village

VETERAN NPR CORRESPONDENT INA JAFFE spent several days in September taping interviews with founders and members of Beacon Hill Village while observing and "listening in" on BHV activities.

Jaffe, who covers the aging of America, is developing a three-part series about the evolution of the Village model and how it is adapting to different situations and different populations. Her stories, which can be heard on NPR's Morning Edition and All Things Considered, have focused on the involvement of older adults in politics and elections, work and retirement, and fashion and sports, as well as issues affecting long term care and end of life choices. Her village series is targeted to air on NPR in late November or early December. ■

Welcome to Allie Hesketh, Social Work Intern

BY DEBORAH DROSNIN

A WARM WELCOME TO ALLIE HESKETH, our social work intern for the 2017-2018 school year. Allie is a perfect fit for the Village. She's pursuing a Master of Social Work degree with a concentration in Older Adults and Families from Boston College, and has worked as a SHINE program intern in the Office of Elder Affairs. Since joining BHV in September, Allie has worked with the Member Engagement Task Force on several projects, including distribution of the Interest and Talent Survey and updating the Ambassador program for new members.

Allie describes herself as a big picture thinker. "I have always wanted to work to make big changes in terms of policies and programs to better meet needs of individuals," she said. "I decided on a social work degree because there is a unique perspective focused on social justice and autonomy." After graduation, Allie hopes to find a job that will help her gain skills in fundraising and management so that she can achieve her long-term goal of running a non-profit organization. ■

PROFILE: CKT5 Co-CHAIRS

AIDEEN JENKINS and JANIE WALLACE

BY LAURA CONNORS

YOU KNOW THE OLD ADAGE ... if you want something done, ask a busy person. That couldn't be truer of the 5th Annual Creative Kitchens Tour co-chairs. BHV volunteer Aideen Jenkins, one of last year's co-chairs, and BHV member Janie Wallace have enthusiastically agreed to co-chair the upcoming Tour, scheduled for Saturday, April 7, 2018.

A resident of the Back Bay, Aideen first volunteered for the Kitchen Tour in 2016. Her professional career in special events, public relations, and technical software sales, along with her passion for volunteering with community-based organizations, fundraising and non-profit administration, made her a natural fit. And because she found Villagers to be a warm and genuine group of people, she has been working on the Tour ever since.

Aideen moved to Boston after her graduate studies to take advantage of "city living" with easy access to the mountains and seashore. She has served on the Board for Women in Development of Greater Boston and especially enjoys her current work helping a young woman in foster care navigate community college and chart her course in life. When not working, Aideen loves to travel, read and work in her urban garden. This year her husband built a fence to keep the rabbits out. As a result, their veggie harvest was terrific.

Janie likes to say she found the Village on the Fast Boat to Salem.

Janie Wallace, a relatively new member of Beacon Hill Village who has "jumped in with both feet," likes to say that she "found the Village on the Fast Boat to Salem." She caught up with a group of Villagers on their way to the Peabody Essex Museum who were noticeably having a great time, and they proceeded to tell her all about BHV. Janie moved to Boston when her job relocated from Manhattan. Beacon Hill Village seemed to be exactly what she was looking for – a way to belong to a group of like-minded people and to become part of a community.

With a background in marketing and business, and a "fair amount of creativity thrown in for good measure," Janie's experience and skills are a great fit for the Kitchen Tour. She found serving as a House Manager for the last Kitchen Tour to be such an enjoyable and rewarding experience that she couldn't say no when asked to co-chair the upcoming Tour. Janie is also sharing her talents with the newly formed Marketing/Communications Task Force and Website Redesign Team, has started teaching an art class for a "very crafty group" of members, enjoys attending musical events and museum tours, and is a member of the BHV book group. Still working part-time, Janie also follows her own artistic endeavors in photography and painted furniture when she's not otherwise busy with Village life.

Janie says she has found the Village very welcoming to newcomers and that they make a point of helping new members find their footing and get involved. "There are many different groups you can join or you can start your own 'interest' group." She certainly has found a way to make the most of Beacon Hill Village.

Aideen loves the Village so much that she wishes there were a village like BHV where her mother lives. Of the upcoming Kitchen Tour she says, "My dream is that we continue to increase awareness and support of Beacon Hill Village with the 2018 Creative Kitchens Tour. Maybe Mom can attend this year." ■
