Professionalism Education Roundtable

If you're an APHC member, you can attend the Professional Education Roundtable, which will take place on the second Friday of the month at 3 p.m. ET. John Spandorfer and others will interview authors from Richard and Sylvia Cruess and Yvonne Steinert book, Teaching Medical Professionalism: Supporting the Development of a Professional Identity.

Developing a Professional Identity: A Learner's Perspective with Robert Sternszus on October 11 – This chapter focuses on how the learners' perspective, summarized from both the literature and personal anecdotes, can help inform curricular transformation with the goal of better supporting learners in their formation of a professional identity. The author breaks down traditional approaches to teaching professionalism, shining light on learner concerns and how shifting the focus onto professional identity formation can successfully address those concerns.

Robert Sternszus, MDCM, Med, FRCPC, is a Hospitalist Pediatrician and an Assistant Professor of Pediatrics and Health Sciences Education at McGill University. He is the Director of the Pediatrics Residency Training Program and the Co-Director of the Foundations in Medical and Health Sciences Education Elective at the Institute of Health Sciences Education. He is involved in the teaching of professionalism and communication skills as well as in researching resident role modeling, professional identity formation, medical student curiosity and the role of residents as teacher.

This session is designed for clinician educators and curriculum designers. It will provide practical strategies to help transform curricula focused on the teaching of professionalism to supporting learners in their formation of a professional identity that are derived from the learners perspective.
