

Many refugees in the country of Uganda had to leave their countries because of war or natural disasters.

Missionaries work with other Christians to provide things like clean water, clothes, and shelter to refugees. Most importantly, they tell the people about Jesus.

More About the Singermans

Kevin and Victoria Singerman are missionaries to Uganda. They live there with their kids Rachel, Josiah, and Micah. They help refugees to have the things they need like clean water, clothes, shelter, and the message of Jesus.

In 2020, their family was visiting the country to Kenya. That's when the coronavirus pandemic hit the countries in Africa—and the whole world! The Singermans could not travel home to Uganda. They stayed in Kenya for many weeks, waiting to go back. Unfortunately, it was not safe for them to return to Uganda, but they were able to fly safely back to the United States.

Wherever missionaries go and wherever they travel, they learn to trust in God and stand strong in their faith.

Rachel is 10 years old. She loves her life in Uganda, but enjoys seeing cousins and eating spaghetti and meatballs when she's in the United States. She likes to read books, ride bikes, and organize things.

Josiah is 8 years old. He likes to have tea with the refugees his family works with and play with refugee children. One day, he played soccer with them and then gave them his soccer ball. He made them so happy!

Micah is 5 years old. He loves visiting the U.S., but he misses his friend Gideon when he's not in Uganda. His parents say that he is great at making new friends and talking to people.
