DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The University President's House has been described as, "a veritable museum piece," because both the house and formal garden are such fine typical examples of the Greek Revival period of design.

Exterior: This fine example of the Greek Revival features a three-sided peristyle with 14 Corinthian columns which rest upon red brick pillars and extend upward for two stories above an English basement. There are 8 columns on the front facade with an additional 3 columns extending along the two sides of the structure. These columns are crowned with an entablature which is plain except for dentils. In the manner typical to Georgia's Piedmont, there is no pediment. There are entablatures over all windows and doorways, also featuring dentils. Windows on the upper story are six-over-six, as are all other windows with the exception of those main floor windows which open onto the portico. These windows are six-over-nine. The magnificent entrance is set in a composition in which a second story doorway opening onto a balcony is also an integral part of the design. Here the Greek Revival doorway with its square antae and consoles is used on the first floor with Corinthian pilasters but a Doric entablature, while the second floor has the normal Greek Revival Doric pilasters with entablature. Green shutters adorn all windows and complement the gleaming white of the clapboard structure. The straight steps from the walk to the portico have been replaced with two semi-circular wood staircases with iron ballusters and railings. The rear of the structure is graced with another two story portico, inset between wings of the house, which features Doric columns. Broad wood steps come straight down to the ground level from the main floor porch and there is also a full porch on the second story level.

Interior: The plan of all levels may be described as the simple, academic, four-room, center-hall version, with two small rear rooms against which the three-sided peristyle returns. On the main floor, an ornate stairway is located on the left and to the rear of the central hall featuring an octagonal newel post and ballusters which repeat the octagonal motif. The two rooms on the right are joined to form a double parlor with twin white marble fireplaces with arched openings and intricate fruit-and-floral patterned cornices and ceiling medallions. These are a perfect complement to two original French thumb-print crystal chandeliers. The rooms to the left have twin brown marble fireplaces and in the dining room is an English crystal chandelier, c. 1810, made by Perry. The house, carefully furnished with period pieces, successfully portrays the opulent grandeur of mansions of the Greek Revival period.

Grounds: A simple white picket fence encloses the grounds of this property. The house is separated from the street with a formal boxwood parterre garden with two large magnolias as dominant elements on either side of the main walk leading from the gate to the portico steps. This original (CONT)

7. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

garden typifies the garden style associated with the Greek Revival in Georgia's Piedmont. The rear garden is designed in the informal style with sweeping lawns and mature trees which are under-planted with flowering trees and shrubs. A feature of the rear garden is a rose garden designed by Dr. Hubert B. Owens, Dean of the University's School of Environmental Design, when the property was acquired by the University.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

This outstanding example of Greek Revival architecture was built by John Thomas Grant in 1856. Grant later sold the home to Benjamin H. Hill. Medora Field Perkerson reports in her book, White Columns in Georgia, that Hill, while living in the house, was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives and later to the Senate. He is credited with influencing President Hayes to withdraw Federal occupation troops and military rule from Georgia, thus ending the Reconstruction Era in 1877, a dozen years after the end of the war. The house changed hands three times in 1883, being sold to James White, Founder of the First National Bank of Athens, in July of that year. It was inherited by White's daughter, the late Mrs. W. F. Bradshaw, and was acquired from her estate by the Bradley Foundation, of Columbus, Georgia, which presented it to the University of Georgia as a home for its president; subsequent to its acquisition of the house in 1949, the University has restored the house and grounds to the luster of their earlier years. The house and grounds are now of "museum" status and serve as an important example of the union of architecture and landscape architecture within the context of the Greek Revival period in Georgia's piedmont.

As the home of the President of the University of Georgia, it has unusual cultural, historical and architectural significance for the entire state. It is a magnificently maintained symbol; a public monument; a work of architecture in the broad and profound senses of that term.

Dear Bob:

Enclosed is the advance nomination list with Mrs. Jewett's signature. You will note that we have added several more University of Georgia items which were inadvertently left off the original list. As I mentioned to you over the telephone, our Board empowered us to make additions to the advance list which obviously qualified. Mrs. Jewett is writing President Davidson today to inform him that University buildings have been placed on the Register because of their state ownership.

I trust that this will be all that is necessary, that is until we begin submitting nomination forms for the structures on this advanced list.

Sincerely,

Bill Mitchell
