The Main Street Historic District in Calais is comprised of two blocks on the south side of Main Street facing the St. Croix River, and several buildings extending up Church Street, Sawyer Avenue and North Street. The majority of the buildings were constructed after the 1870 fire of Calais, though a few date back to the mid nineteenth century. None of the buildings have had major alterations.

The delineation of the Calais Historic District was arrived at after careful on site inspection by the State Historic Preservation Officer, a member of the Historic Preservation Commission staff and a representative of the Community Planning Center.

The area of the district was chosen excluding neighboring buildings for the following reasons:

1. Those structures on the west side of North Street are of much more recent construction than those within the district and thus not chronologically homogeneous.
2. The commercial buildings on the north side of Main Street include a number of recent commercial intrusions and those of the period which remain have been severely altered.
3. The area east of Church Street contains a mixture of residential and commercial properties not suitable for a commercial district.
4. The area south of the district is largely residential.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Historic District in Calais exhibits commercial ^{and} governmental, residential architecture of the mid to late nineteenth century. The cohesive block has not undergone any major exterior changes nor been encroached upon by modern intrusions. The buildings in the district were constructed at a time when Calais was a thriving shipbuilding and lumber port, and are an excellent tribute to that era.

Calais was incorporated as a city in 1850, with a population of 4,749. The city is situated at the head of tide water on the St. Croix River twelve miles from the Passamaquoddy Bay, and was an excellent port for ship building and the lumber industry as well as an ideal site for water powered mills. The excavation of granite was another source of income which drew settlers to the area. These industries were at their peak at the end of the nineteenth century, and the border city had continual traffic up and down its' wharves.

In August of 1870 a major fire destroyed much of the downtown area. It began to the east of the Main Street Historic District block behind the Old Post Office. The fire spread down Main Street and consumed the wooden frame buildings up to the location of the present Ross' Store. Construction was resumed immediately following the fire, and all new building was done in brick. The Beckett, Todd and Blake and Taylor buildings were erected in the Fall of 1870. The remaining buildings in the block were completed by 1886 and are all constructed in the Italianate style of architecture. The Hill and J. Todd stores are the only brick buildings in the district which pre-date the fire. The Greek Revival wood residences also survived the fire.

After this disaster the Fire Department's equipment supply grew substantially to demand a new Engine House, which was constructed in 1874. The fire department moved out in 1970, but the buildings is currently used as a Senior Citizen's Center and Community Planning Center.

The City Building, constructed in 1901, was the last addition to the Historic District. It is still the central location for all town offices.

Calais was able to rebuild much of its downtown area within one year of a major fire in 1870, due to the ample supply of carpenters and builders from its shipbuilding industry. The Main Street Historic District is comprised of buildings both architecturally and historically significant to this period when Calais was a leading salt water port.
