Thomas Nelson House
Westchester County, New York

Narrative Description

The Thomas Nelson House, an Italianate frame residence built c. 1860, is situated in a residential neighborhood comprised of single family homes (dating from the mid-19th to late-20th centuries) and sits on a 1.67 acre site with mature landscaping. In addition to the house, one small outbuilding is on the property, the well house, and is included in this nomination. It is located approximately 15 feet from the north east corner of the main building.

The Nelson House is two stories in height with a slightly hipped roof. The building's footprint is approximately 41 feet wide by 52 feet deep; excluding the one-car garage added in 1950. The exterior of the building is clapboards. The basement's foundation is a combination of stone and brick. Cement steps lead into the northeast corner of the basement from the east yard.

The one-story open front porch extends across the three-bay main façade and around to the first bay of the west elevation. It has scrolled brackets supported by paired posts and bracketed eaves. Each of the large four, two-over-two sash windows on the main façade have heavily molded trim with a semicircular carved fan-shaped design atop the lintels. Twenty two-inch diameter wood stars decorate the segmentally arched main entrance surround. The entrance contains two glazed wood doors and exterior screen doors. A pedimented bay window projects from the center of the second story of the main façade.

The roof has a projecting wooden box cornice supported by large evenly spaced brackets with wood dentils between them. The brackets are constructed of metal and wood. The roof is clad in rolled asphalt roofing. The large shallow built-in gutters are lined with copper. The large brick chimney, which serves four fireplaces and the furnace, is covered with fiberglass chimney wrap.

On the north side (rear) of the house is a two-story wing that also has two-over-two sash windows and a bracketed cornice similar to that on the rest of the building. Projecting from the east side of the wing is a small porch added after 1950 and measuring 5.5 feet by 16 feet. The east and west facades also have two-over-two sash windows but they are smaller and less ornamented than the main facade. A bay window projects from the first-story center bay of the west elevation. After 1950, a door replaced the south window of the first floor bay of the west elevation.

The first floor of the interior of the house is comprised of a center hall (15 feet by 22 feet) with a walnut freestanding staircase, a dining room and library (each 17 feet by 17.5 feet) on the east side of the hall and a living room (17 feet by 35 feet) on the west side of the hall. All of the public rooms have original deep plaster cornices, plaster ceiling medallions, wood base boards, and marble mantels. The living room bay window has decorative woodwork over the arch. The floors of the center hall, library and living room are modern wall-to-wall carpet over the pine wide board floors.

The dining room floor is laid with decorative two-inch wide wood strips of pine and walnut. To the north, past the hall, is a corridor leading to the kitchen wing (20 feet by 19 feet) that has its original brick hearth and mantel. The hearth was bricked in before the turn of the century and a freestanding wood pipe stove was installed. The corridor contains several closets, a half bath and the servants' stairs.

At the first landing from the center hall staircase is a corridor containing two closets, two full baths, the servants' stairs and two small bedrooms, one 7 feet by 12 feet the other 10 feet by 12 feet. The wall separating these two rooms is a late addition, as it is comprised of sheet rock over two-by-four wall studs. Behind the closet in the larger of the two rooms is the opening to the chimney that has now been closed over. The corridor floor has two-inch wide pine flooring and its walls and ceiling are plaster. Both bedrooms have plaster walls and ceilings. The smaller of the two bedrooms also has two-inch wide pine flooring.

On either side of the center hall staircase above the first landing are the five main bedrooms. There is one bedroom at each corner of the house, each approximately 14 feet by 14 feet. Between the two bedrooms on the south side, is a small bedroom measuring 10 feet by 14 feet. The two bedrooms on the east side of the house each have a marble mantel/fireplace. The two bedrooms on the north side of the main part of the house each have wide pine board floors.

All rooms in the main part of the house have plaster walls and ceilings, wainscoting, wood baseboards, intact door surrounds/moldings and solid four panel doors.

The basement floor is poured concrete. The columns that support the first floor are unsawn tree timbers of which there are four. Two supports are steel and are of modern design. The basement ceiling has been plastered. A 10 feet by 12 feet room in the southeast corner of the basement has been created by the erection of brick walls.

Both the exterior and interior of the Nelson House maintain a high level of integrity. With the exception of storm windows installed sometime in the 1950's and the replacement of worn floorboards on the main porch, no changes have been made to the buildings façade except for paint. The interior in the main part of the house has seen little change except again for paper and paint. The kitchen was "modernized" in the 1950's.

The one outbuilding on the property, the well house, is in its original location. The building is wood clapboard on a poured concrete foundation. The roof is covered in asphalt shingles. A 6" pipe in the center of the floor leads to the original water source for the property. It is not clear when the structure was erected, but it is likely 19th century in origin.

Thomas Nelson House
Westchester County, New York

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Thomas Nelson House is significant in the area of architecture (Criteria C) as a distinctive, intact example of Italianate style residential architecture in Westchester County. Built c.1860 for Thomas Nelson, a New York City attorney and politician, it exhibits the hallmark features of its style, with its square shape, large windows with decorative surrounds and two-over-two sash, oriel windows, bracketed cornice, hip roof, and a prominent open front porch with paired supports and bracketed eaves. On the interior are the original marble mantels, decorative plasterwork, and an unusual freestanding staircase with walnut newels, balusters and railings. The house retains a high degree of integrity on the exterior and interior.

In the fall of 1654, Dutch trader Jan Peeck sailed up the Hudson River to trade with the local Mahicander (Mohican) Indians in the area. The land he found had a large protected harbor and a creek running along side it. It was in this spot that Peeck set up his trading post and wharf. Peekskill honors its founder with his name. The Dutch word for creek is "kill", hence, Peeck's Kill or Peekskill. During the 1700's, Peekskill's main industry was shipping. However, Peekskill's most important industries were its iron foundries where, first plows and then stoves were manufactured from 1826 until the start of the Civil War.

Thomas Nelson was born in Peekskill on January 23, 1819. His ancestor, John Nelson, originally from Norfolk, England, settled first in Flatbush, Long Island before 1670 and then moved to what is now Mamaroneck in Westchester County, New York. Thomas Nelson attended Williams College in Massachusetts and was qualified for admittance to the junior class. He was a member of the Sigma Phi Fraternity and delivered the commencement oration. After graduation, he studied law with Henry B. Cowles in New York City. Upon his return to Peekskill in 1837, he continued to study law at his father's firm. His father, William Nelson, was at that time District Attorney for the counties of Westchester and Dutchess. Thomas Nelson was admitted to the bar in January 1840 at the age of 21 at a term of the Supreme Court held in Albany. He then became a co-partner in his father's firm for a period of ten years. His father, William Nelson, was considered to be one of Peekskill's most distinguished citizens during the Civil War era. William Nelson was a Congressman from 1847 to 1851, District Attorney of Westchester and Dutchess counties, and member of the NYS Assembly and Senate. He was also responsible for inviting President Abraham Lincoln to stop in Peekskill for a brief greeting to the citizens on his way to his first inauguration on February 19, 1861.

In 1851, at the age of 32, Thomas Nelson was appointed by President Fillmore to the Office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oregon. Nelson established a law practice in New York City upon his return to the east in 1853. A business letter dated October 28, 1854 is addressed to Hon. Thomas Nelson, No. 70 Wall Street, New York. In 1860, he was honored with the Republican nomination for Representative in Congress for the district composed at that time of the strong Democratic Counties of Westchester and Rockland. During the Civil War, he was a supporter of the policies of President Lincoln and greatly opposed the system of American Slavery. Early in the war, he was appointed by Governor Morgan a member of the War Committee for the Counties of Westchester, Putnam and Rockland and served until the end of the war. He was also elected as one of the Directors of the Westchester County National Bank, an office he held until his death.

The Rev. David M. Halliday married Thomas Nelson to Cornelia L. Seymour, daughter of David L. Seymour and Eliza (Ranney) Seymour of Peekskill on June 4, 1844. They had three children who lived to maturity: George P., born February 22, 1849 and died January 15, 1882; Thomas, born July 18, 1860 in the family's new house on Constant Avenue (now Seymour Avenue) and died January 2, 1930; and David Seymour, born March 1, 1847 and died February 12, 1851. Judge Thomas Nelson died at this residence on Constant Avenue in Peekskill, July 1907. It is not known when his wife died.

It is not clear if Judge Thomas Nelson lived in Peekskill full time and commuted to his law office in New York City or kept a separate residence there. In a personal letter to his wife Cornelia dated January 2, 1886, he lists his address on the letter as 33 Liberty Street, NY. He writes to her, "Yesterday morning opened with splendid sunshine. It was not my intention to make any calls. Miss Ada had arranged to receive Miss Anderson in Carlton St. (It may be in Adelphi St) and had secured my promise to call on her. Before I had time to give the matter thought I proposed also to call on Mr. Haviland, and perhaps on Ann. At a breakfast with Mr. Welcher... and "So now you have a resume of the days operations then." And "Take for yourself the affectionate homage of your solitary husband." Being the day after New Year's Day one would have expected him to be at home with his wife and family, but it appears his business required that he maintain a separate residence in New York City. Interestingly, the local Peekskill newspaper indicates that there may have been another residence later on. Judge Nelson was for many years a regular attendant at the Presbyterian Church. When he removed to Brooklyn, he became an attendant at the Central Congregational Church in that city.

The Nelson House in Peekskill was completed around 1860. As he returned to New York State in 1853 and received the Republican nomination for Congressional Representative for Westchester and Dutchess counties in 1860 – he would have had to have been a legal resident of those counties to represent them. An 1867 map of Peekskill clearly shows a house belonging to a "T. Nelson" on Constant Avenue and one of the first residential directories of Peekskill dated 1875 lists "Nelson, Thomas, lawyer, (N.Y.) h Constant av n James". In addition, his third son Thomas is known to have been born in 1860 at the Nelson residence in Peekskill and attended the Peekskill Military Academy, so we know the family was in the house by that time.

Westchester County, New York

The Nelson House typifies residential architecture built in villages and small cities in Westchester County for the upper end of the middle classes in the mid 19th century. It was designed in the popular Italianate style, with a prominent bracketed cornice, spacious wrap-around verandah, large windows, double arched entrance doors, and decorative plasterwork and marble mantelpieces on the interior. An unusual feature of the house is the free-standing staircase in the center of the hall that leads up to a landing and turns to lead to both sides of the upstairs hall. Besides the well house, there were likely a number of other outbuildings on the property, including a carriage house.

Based on assessment maps dated June 5, 1945, the original Nelson estate was approximately 8.5 acres. The property was gradually subdivided, mostly to family members. When Judge Thomas Nelson died, his estate passed to his surviving son, Thomas Nelson Jr. Upon Thomas Jr.'s death in 1930, the property was transferred to his wife, Cornelia. In 1935, Cornelia Nelson sold a .849-acre parcel of the estate to her nephew, T. Nelson Craven who was a child of Mrs. Nelson's sister, Caroline Lesley Craven. In 1941, Cornelia Nelson sold a 2.8-acre parcel at the northern most portion of the estate to Edward G. Halsey. Mr. Craven purchased a second parcel from Mrs. Nelson in the amount of .6 acres. Also in 1941, Cornelia Nelson sold the Nelson House and land incorporating the barn to Mr. and Mrs. Willis Hill-LeClair. Mrs. Hill-LeClair was one of Cornelia Nelson's nieces. At that time, the property's address was still listed as Constant Avenue, but at some point the access from Constant Avenue was blocked off and an existing or new entrance was created from the end of Seymour Lane. According to the Property Assessment Records, the property at the time of the 1941 sale was 2.5 acres and included the barn and sold for $18,400. Cornelia Nelson must have stayed on with her niece, as she died in the house in 1944. The property was sold again in 1946 to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hopkins. The Hopkins' purchase included only the Nelson House and consisted of 1.73 acres. In February of 1985 the house was sold to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Devir for $133,000 and then in 1998 was sold to Karen Burghart.
