DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Standing on the west side of Main Street between Ashland Avenue and Elmwood Avenue the one-story Niagara Falls Public Library is built of yellow brick with stone trim on a high stone basement. The building appears rectangular in shape when viewed from Main Street, but to the rear (west) it billows out in a generous semi-circle.

The front (Main Street) facade is seven bays wide with an imposing front entrance in the center. The pedimented doorway is recessed slightly and flanked by two monumental stone ionic columns. The windows are also topped with pediments resting on ionic pilasters. The building has a flat roof and a heavy stone cornice which establishes a horizontal emphasis repeated in the stone string courses connecting the window lintels and sills and in the smooth coursed ashlar base.

Little has changed on the interior since the building was described by the Niagara Falls Gazette on April 14, 1904 at the time of the library's opening:

The interior of the building is rich in its appointments. From the vestibule which is finished in quartered oak and marble one enters the delivery room which is directly in front of the book stacks and which is furnished with an octagon receiving room is also finished in quartered oak and marble. At the left of the main room is the children's reading room which is a new feature in libraries...In the rear of the delivery counter are the radial two tier book stacks each having a capacity of 16,000 volumes and may be added to at any time. From their positions at the receiving counter the librarians command a full view of the entire first floor of the library. In the basement of the building is the room for the historical society and the lecture room...It (the lecture room) has a seating capacity of 200 persons and is fitted with a large and roomy stage. (Today, this space has been filled with stacks.)

The general decorative tone is green, the tints throughout the entire building being in that color. Everything is rich and lasting. The light fixtures are in old

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Functional, silent and almost grim on the exterior and charmingly warm and ornate inside, the Niagara Falls Public Library is a turn-of-the-century period piece, one of a special generation of public libraries endowed by Andrew Carnegie.

The early 20th century Carnegie libraries hold a touchingly human as well as enduring place in the history of American philanthropy and social history. They stand today as a record that the U.S. public library movement was not initiated through government programs or by public demand but rather due to the farsighted generosity of an extraordinary individual.

Some $45 million of Carnegie's vast fortune went into the construction and endowment of library buildings, however, a community was not simply given a blank check by the Carnegie Foundation in order to build a library. The $50,000 grant awarded to Niagara Falls in 1901 came with the stipulation that the city must spend $7,000 annually for the building's maintenance. A main library and a branch already existed in Niagara Falls with a total of about 10,000 books acquired throughout the 19th century. It started with 40 books donated back in 1814 by General Pankhurst Whitney and was known originally as the Grand Niagara Library. Small but determined and innovative, the Niagara Falls Library developed in the late 19th century, an unusual reputation for its collection of books for the blind.

The city of Niagara Falls was established in 1892 and by 1901 when the Carnegie grant was secured the existing library was one of "village proportions" facing "city needs." The site on Main Street in the former village of Suspension Bridge was chosen in the estimated center of the reading population of the day, and in 1904 at the time of its official opening, the new library boasted the greatest circulation in proportion to population in New York State.

8. Significance 2 (Continuation Sheet)

(Number all entries)

E.E. Joralemon, a local architect, designed the structure with a capacity for 50,000 volumes. The contractor was George B. Long and the plumbing and electrical work done by F.W. Oliver Company. The completed building showed an extraordinary emphasis on the interior, a fact explained by The Niagara Falls Gazette:

As is well known this structure cost $50,000, and most of the money was spend on the interior, where it will be most appreciated by the reading public.¹

With its lavish plaster pilasters and moldings, marble steps and pale skylights, the "frosted cake" interior which is still intact continued to dazzle visitors and residents as quaintly expressed by one observer in 1914:

...(the) building is beautiful indeed and you will notice that others as well as yourself take a full deep breath as you tarry to look at the whiteness of it all before climbing the marble steps that will bring you in direct communication with volumes, the contents of which are equally immaculate.²

The library grew with the years, and by 1950 the building designed for 50,000 volumes had to deal with 116,000. The auditorium on the lower level was converted for stack space, and a number of branches were established. The continued concern for handicapped readers led to the establishment of a microfilm book service for the bedridden, said to be the first of its kind in a New York State library. The equipment was given by the Scottish Rite Masons in 1949 and was designed for bedridden patients unable to hold heavy volumes. The microfilmed books are projected onto the ceiling.³

The seventy-year old library is to be vacated in the near future for the new Earl Brydges Library designed by Paul Rudolf several blocks away, and plans are underway to convert the old library into a city arts center.
