Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Saugerties is an incorporated village located on a low plateau above the mouth of the Esopus Creek on the west shore of the Hudson River. The creek, dropping sharply, provides a site suitable for hydropowered industry. The primary village streets are laid out along old routes leading inland from the landing and early mills. The confines of the creek on the south and of the edge of the plateau have directed village development away from the river to the northwest. A second, smaller stream, the Sawyer's Kill, runs to the river along the northeastern boundary of the village.

The core of the nineteenth-century business district is still intact, lining both sides of Partition Street and Main Street, which intersect in the center of the commercial area. A few stores on adjacent Market Street, which once led to an old turnpike road, are included. Only the core of the business and commercial section of the village is included in this nomination. With few exceptions the district consists of nineteenth-century two or three-story brick stores with apartments or storage on the upper floors and storefronts opening directly onto sidewalks at the street level. Main Street is very wide. Two churches, a U.S. Post Office, three minor residences, three nineteenth-century brick barns, a nineteenth-century frame barn, and a few incidental sheds and garages are included. Modern intrusions are few (listed below). Eighty-three structures are included in the district. There are a few empty lots which are used for parking (see district map). The village of Saugerties owns ample municipal parking space near Partition Street which should be very useful in the planned revitalization of the district.

The streetscape, typically "small town" and modest in scale, still gives an impression of the last century. Closer examination of individual structures shows some storefront remodeling with modern materials and a few inappropriate signs. Both a sign ordinance and a design review ordinance are under consideration by the village. Despite some street-level alterations to building fronts, the district is otherwise well preserved. While pediments, cornices, lintels, doorways and storefronts represent all periods of village growth from the late eighteenth century to the twentieth century, most buildings are from the last half of the nineteenth century. Locally quarried bluestone sidewalks installed in the nineteenth century front most of the shops.

The compact business section is different from adjacent residential areas which feature well-kept older houses, many of frame construction, on individual lots. Some of these residences are historic buildings which will be eligible to be included in future individual or historic district nominations from the village. Potential historic districts exist at the west end of Main Street, on Market Street and on the east end of Main Street. Individual historic buildings are located on the south end of Partition Street.

Boundary lines for the district follow streets and property lines. In order to avoid an extremely irregular boundary at the rear of buildings on Main Street, the north side of Jane Street between James Street and Partition Street was included. Beyond the district to the east begins a residential section (which, however, includes a modern dairy store as well as vacant land behind Partition Street used for parking). Beyond the district to the west is a residential section. The south boundary was set where Partition Street curves and drops down a hill. Here are lower-density mixed business and residential structures, some dilapidated. North of the district, beyond two unexceptional business buildings facing a parking lot and the twentieth-century village hall, is a residential section.

Modern intrusions included within the Main-Partition Streets Historic District are a Texaco Gas Station on Partition Street, a Cumberland Farm Store (remodeled gas station) on Main Street, a brick-and-glass modern addition to the Town Hall on Main Street, and two concrete-block garages off Partition Street. A small florist shop on Partition Street which has a modern front extension is a remodeled older building. (PHOTOS 23-28)

Further descriptive information can be found in the New York Statewide Inventory for each of the buildings in the historic district. The inventory is on file with the Division for Historic Preservation.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Main-Partition Streets Historic District has both historical and architectural significance. Buildings from a variety of periods remain in the district, providing a wealth of historical association and an architectural record of nineteenth-century building styles. The buildings reflect aspects of the broader social and commercial changes that altered the face of upper Hudson Valley communities during the nineteenth century.

Although the oldest mill in Saugerties was established in the seventeenth century, little development occurred then. After Palatine Germans joined the early settlers of Dutch extraction around 1710, two mills, one on each of Saugerties' bordering streams, were established. However, as late as 1811 the hamlet contained only twenty-one houses. In the 1820's, when many Hudson River communities began to grow, a businessman named Henry Barclay sparked the expansion of the community by establishing the Ulster Iron Works and a paper mill. In 1831 the rapidly growing village incorporated under the name of Ulster, a name that was changed to Saugerties in 1855. Before the Civil War the iron works, processing pig iron and scrap, employed three hundred people working round-the-clock shifts. Most building sites in the business district were occupied by that time. Manufacture of paper, calico prints, and white lead and paint, and shipment of hides helped support the community as a whole and made possible a busy business district. Lining the streets above the docks and mills were various tradesmen typically found in nineteenth-century villages. When the early industries failed after mid-century, paper processing, brick making and the shipment of gunpowder, farm goods, river ice, and, especially, bluestone from area quarries replaced them. The village population stabilized at about 4,000 around 1870 after forty years of sharp increase and remained almost unchanged for one hundred years. Due to the lack of twentieth-century growth, the district has few modern structures. The nature of the population, however, changed with the work available. Irish, Germans, and, later, Italians established themselves as workers in the mills, quarries, and brickyards as well as in the village. Late in the century Saugerties became a popular landing and hostelry for tourists going to boarding houses in the Catskill mountain foothills.

Fortunately there have been no major fires or other disasters in the district. Many buildings of special historical interest remain, including a 1780's public house, the Barrett-Johnstone Building, which housed a ballroom used for a courtroom and village elections, another inn, the Phoenix Hotel of 1827, now a bus station, and the still-functioning Exchange Hotel, built before 1840. Among the oldest store buildings is Lamb's Hardware Store on Market St. which was associated with the Russell family, nineteenth-century merchants. A bank of the 1850's still occupies its original building and historic churches anchor each end of the district on Main Street. The J.K. Merritt Dry Goods Store retains its faded painted wall sign from the nineteenth century. Other tradesmen's buildings of the late Victorian era are clearly labeled on rooftop pediments: Dr. J.H. Reed 1890 (a drug store); I. Lazarus, Clothier; Jacob Brede 1876 (a bakery). The historic bluestone sidewalks are unusual relics of the bluestone shipping period of the 1800's.

The Main-Partition Streets Historic District contains numerous buildings of special architectural interest. Perhaps the most noteworthy mid-century building on Main Street is the Scofield-Halpert Building, a two-story, five-bay stuccoed brick store topped by an extravagant segmental arch. The little-altered 1850's facade includes two storefronts separated by a center entrance to the upper floor. The entrance is intact with its original door. The second-story paired, round-headed windows accented by a hood molding have a strong stylistic relationship to the two well-preserved churches of the same decade on the same street (see Photo 9). The First Congregational Church, of stuccoed brick scored to simulate ashlar, has a central entrance tower and nave with center aisle. Its Romanesque Revival exterior is highlighted by the use of semi-circular arches for window and door openings (Photo 11). The semi-circular arches are repeated in the larger Reformed Church on the east end of the district. This church has a soaring spire atop its tower situated at the side of a gabled facade. Next door, its 1858 parsonage retains an intact facade with bracketed cornice and porch and, once again, paired, round-headed windows, here set in a gable dormer (Photos 1 and 2). On Market Street is a Federal period, Flemish-bond fronted brick store with pedimented gable and oval window (Photo 20). On Partition Street another notable building has an early second-story iron-railed balcony typical of the 1860's. Balconies were a common feature where living quarters were included over stores but, because of deterioration, have usually been removed (Photo 16). Hidden behind the row of stores on Partition Street is another rare survival, a large brick livery stable now used for small-scale manufacturing (Photo 13).

The district also has valuable late Victorian buildings on Main and Partition Streets. The E. Whitaker Block Building retains cast-iron cresting above a mansard roof; the cornices of the Van Buskirk, Dr. Reed, Jacob Brede and Lazarus Clothier buildings are topped by named and dated pediments once considered indispensable to an up-to-date establishment. Of outstanding architectural value and technological interest are two buildings with complete iron fronts. The galvanized sheet-iron fronts were shipped from Mesker Brothers Iron Works in St. Louis, Missouri. Mesker Brothers of St. Louis was a large-scale manufacturer of iron building fronts and architectural elements. The fronts for brick buildings were promoted for their durability, appearance and inexpensiveness, as well as for fire resistance and convenience. On Partition Street, the Lazarus Clothier Building has a full Mesker facade including two pediments and Mesker insignia at the bases of the storefront pilasters at street level (Photos 14 and 15). The International House Building on Main Street has a similar front of half the size (Photo 6). Both are further identifiable because of their similarity to the building facade featured on the company's 1892 catalog.[1] The fronts were originally shipped all over the United States and are a valuable discovery.

Pressure for changes such as increased height of buildings and replacement with modern structures has been minimal. There remain a variety of styles and unaltered details that preserve the sense of a small-scale, densely built business district in a typical nineteenth-century riverside village.

Additional historical and architectural information on each individual structure can be found in the New York Statewide Inventory which is on file with the Division for Historic Preservation.

Dear Mr. Fish:

On behalf of Mr. Stanley W. Hulett, thank you for your letter of October 22 concerning the nomination of the Main-Partition Street Historic District, Ulster County, New York, to the National Register of Historic Places.

Nominations to the National Register are made by the State Historic Preservation Officer, Mr. Orin Lehman, Commissioner, New York State Office of Parks, Recreation and Historic Preservation, Agency Building #1, Empire State Plaza, Albany, New York 12238. We have been informed by Mr. Lehman's staff that the Main-Partition Street Historic District nomination has been conditionally approved by the State Review Board, a body of professionals in fields related to historic preservation.

The National Park Service is not reviewing and registering privately owned properties in the National Register until regulations have been revised in accordance with the National Historic Preservation Act Amendments of 1980. These amendments require major changes in the procedures by which privately owned properties are listed in the National Register, including a provision whereby owners of private properties must be given an opportunity to concur in, or object to, nominations. We have requested that the State Historic Preservation Officers not submit nominations of privately owned properties until regulations are in effect.

The revised regulations were transmitted to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House by Secretary Watt on October 14, 1981. These Committees will have 30 days to review the regulations prior to publication in the "Federal Register." It is anticipated that the National Register regulations will be in interim effect sometime in November. At that time, the National Register staff will resume reviewing and registering privately owned properties. After the regulations take interim effect, Mr. Lehman will send the notices required under the revised procedures and again present the Main-Partition Street Historic District nomination to the State Review Board for final approval prior to forwarding the nomination to the National Park Service for final review.

If you need further information or assistance, please let us know.

Sincerely,

Nancy C. Garrett

Acting Deputy Director

Dear Commissioner Lehman,

The County of Ulster concurs in your designation of the following historic sites.

L. B. D. Hoornbeek Store Complex
Reformed Church of Shawangunk Complex
Tuthilltown Grist Mill
Hendrikus DuBois House
Anthony Yelverton House
Main-Partition Street Historic District

Of course, our only concern would be that the County of Ulster would not be in any way responsible for the maintenance of these sites.

It is our sincere hope that private funds will be available for restoration. Two of the sites will require a great deal of restoration (Anthony Yelverton House and the Hendrikus DuBois House).

Very truly yours,

Thomas W. Roach
