DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Constructed circa 1889 and eclectic in style, the W.H. Jones Mansion is an impressive example of late Nineteenth Century domestic architecture. Constructed in pressed, red brick on a high ashlar stone foundation, the building is composed of irregularly massed forms and measures 2 1/2 stories in height. The wall surfaces are broken by a stone watertable and several beltcourses. The slate roof is high and hipped with steeply pitched gables on each elevation.

The front porch with paired columns and main entrance with heavily carved double wooden doors are located on the north eastern corner of the building. The composition is balanced by a circular tower with a flat roof on the north western corner. A variety of window shapes and sizes are employed. Included among them are square, rectangular, round arched and paired windows, some with the original leaded or stained glass intact. Midway between the first and second level, a large three section bowed window projects slightly on the west facade.

The Jones Mansion is richly embellished with ornamental detail. Stone carvings with plant and animal motifs appear on the beltcourse, lintels and frieze, as well as on panels between the windows and on the columns of the porch. Contrasting stone, in a checkerboard pattern, decorates the gable on the facade. Scrolled ironwork appears on the porch and as cresting on the roof and tower. The gables are flanked and topped with finials and corbelled brickwork decorates the four tall chimneys. The outstanding interior feature is the heavily carved S-curved staircase.

A carriage house, measuring approximately 35' x 75' and 2 stories in height, is located to the rear of the property. It is partially constructed of pressed brick on a stone foundation. The second level consists of horizontal clapboards with an overlay of vertical boards. A tower with conical, finial topped roof is located on the northeastern corner of the building. A gabled, slate roof covers the remainder of the structure. Decorative features include stone beltcourse and lintels on the first level and a tall, corbelled, brick chimney.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The W. H. Jones Mansion is an outstanding example of late Nineteenth Century residential architecture in Columbus. At the close of the century Broad Street was a tree lined avenue where many of the Columbus' finest homes were located. W.H. Jones, owner of the Jones Dry Goods Store, built the home in 1889 and lived in it until 1923. The property has remained in the family until recently although used for commercial purposes.

As the advent of the automobile pushed the city limits eastward the families along Broad Street relocated in the suburbs. Broad Street has remained a major East - West artery and therefore, never deteriorated to the same extent as the areas to its immediate north and south. Nevertheless, the present mixed residential - office - apartment use of the area has resulted in the demolition of many of these homes. More recently several gas stations and fast food chains have begun to appear.

The W.H. Jones Mansion is undoubtedly one of the most opulent homes remaining from this significant period in Broad Street's development. The property was recently sold to an individual interested in its preservation.
