Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Farmstead of fieldstone quarried on property, built in two parts: pre-1700 and 1700, with 1751 addition and 1916 service wing. Walls are 2 feet thick; date medallion "1700-1751" over door of front main facade.

Earliest section, pre-1700 and possibly once a separate dwelling, 2 stories, 2 bays wide by 1 bay deep. Corner fireplace, unpeeled log floor joists, batten door with original bar and hardware (moved from original location as main entrance to 1700 Great Hall). First floor used as weaving-spinning room and later as schoolroom; loom hooks still in oak and chestnut beams. 2nd floor, once connected by ladder, was the tutor's room and flax storage. Basement, still dirt floor and shallower than the rest of the basement area, was a rootcellar, and now is a wine cellar and general storage area. There was no connection between this section and the 1700 Great Hall until the 1916 renovation (see below).

The present living room was the 1700 Great Hall (3 stories, 3 bays wide by 2 bays deep), originally divided into two rooms by a plank partition which was removed and used to panel the diningroom and corner cupboard. The ceiling is approximately 9 ft. high, with oak and chestnut chamfered beams, 12" x 15" in thickness. Above each fireplace are rare, built-in storage cupboards with pannelled doors and drawers. Hinges are original; drawer and door pulls were teardrop brass and are retained elsewhere in house. Two original "gunport" windows are extant, with oak shutters and original strap and pin hinges. The other windows were recut to larger size in the 19th Century. Floorboards in the weave room and Great Hall are original wide random flooring.

The present diningroom is the 1751 addition (separate datestone), and served as the kitchen until the mid-19th century. Large fireplace was subdivided into a smokehouse-closet arrangement, still retained. Stone walls were unplastered, now covered with Great Hall partition. This room is one step below level of Great Hall. East door leads to courtyard, pump and 19th century kitchen (now demolished), and is Dutch (original). West door leads to small porch with original roof. Window shutters are original.

Second story space is divided: tutor's room retained over weave room, but with connection now to rest of house; Great Hall 2nd floor was originally two rooms with large oak beams, is now divided into master bedroom, second bedroom and bath. Staircase repositioned from original, winding stair on SE side of fireplace (where open archway now leads to weaveroom) to NE side of fireplace, and an upper hall created. Bedroom above 1751 addition has fireplace, and has been divided to allow addition of a small bathroom. Third floor is unchanged (see floor plan).

Specific dates pre 1700, 1700, 1751
Builder/Architect (Swedish?) unknown; John & Joseph Sharpless

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

61-year old John Sharpless and his family of seven were among the first English Quakers to settle the predominantly Swedish Delaware River tier. Arriving at Upland on Aug. 14, 1682, the Sharpless family moved up Ridley Creek to part of their 1,000 acre tract, between Ridley and Crum Creeks. A log cabin was erected against a large rock in the floodplain, and a larger, more permanent home was started by John Sharpless before his death in 1685. Several of the children died and the family faced hard times until the surviving sons grew up. Son Joseph, a carpenter, finished the house with the help of his brother in 1700.

This house is "Wolley Stille", named for neighbor Olof Stille, and exhibits both Swedish and English elements of design and construction. It is unknown whether this is because an earlier Swedish structure was incorporated into the later Sharpless building, or because, as tradition has it, Swedish neighbors assisted in the erection of the house.

The Sharplesses became and remain a prominent Pennsylvania family, professional leaders and educators. The original cabin's rock just below "Wolley Stille" is the site of family reunions, and two significant Sharpless colonial homes are extant on adjoining properties, as are remains of the farm outbuildings, mill race, springhouse, and related sites. Except for 1939-1961, the Sharpless family has owned this homestead since its construction.

Besides the curious mingling of Swedish and English elements, "Wolley Stille" is noteworthy for the extensive Philadelphia panneling over the interior fireplaces; Winterthur authorities have commented that this design and execution may be the earliest extant example of the type. The teardrop brasses and other original hardware, the gunport windows, and basement brick arcade supports are also unusual elements. A tunnel, now closed, once led to the lower hillside and was reputedly built in case of Indian attack and later used in the Underground Railroad.

The house has undergone alterations by later generations, but these are well-documented and minor except for the 1915-1916 "colonial" renovation by architect Donald Robb, as described in item #7.
