Dear Bill:

Many thanks for the copy of
"In Pursuit of the PhD" by yourself and Neil Rudenstine. It is a treasure trove of information and perceptual analysis from which I shall certainly be mining Quotes! You and Neil deserve the warm thanks of all of us. After a quick scan, I am now looking forward to reading in detail.

Again many thanks and all best wishes. Sincerely Allan

Dear Lew and Ash:

I am responding to your letter of January 15 with which you forwarded a preprint copy of your new book Beyond Spinoff: Military and Commercial Technologies in a Changing World.

What with the pressures of getting the FYI 1993 budget tied up I have as yet only had an opportunity to glance through it and from those glances it is clear that I shall want to read it with great care.

My Counsel advises me, however, that it would be inappropriate for me to be quoted on your dust jacket or in future advertising given the position that I now hold and I have learned not to argue with my Counsel!

Let me wish you every success with the book and with warmest best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Allan:

Several of us here at Harvard's Center for Science and International Affairs have recently completed this book, Beyond Spinoff: Military and Commercial Technologies in a Changing World, which is in the final stages of publication by Harvard Business School Press. The book attempts to analyze the relationship between DOD's large investments in technology and the performance of U.S. high-tech firms in international competition.

Beginning with the defense-commercial interface, the book ends up providing a roadmap to federal technology policies that will both preserve the technological preeminence of the U.S. military and contribute to the competitive edge of American companies (insofar as government action can contribute to competitiveness of the private sector). We hope the book will inform leaders in government and business about the challenges of managing the private-public technology interface in a new and demanding world.

The book makes the following points:

-- The relationship between defense and commercial technology has been a rich and fruitful one in the postwar years, but four factors make it necessary to redefine this relationship: (1) The dramatic changes in the national security scene brought on by the collapse of the Warsaw Pact. (2) The internationalization of trade and of the tech base. (3) Certain changes in the way technology is generated and diffused in modern industry. (4) The limited scope of government influence in what is, after all, largely a private sector responsibility.

-- For the defense department, these changes imply a need to work in new ways with commercial industry, and to rely on the civil tech base much more than it used to.

-- For the competitive position of US industry, these changes call for new modes of federal technology policy beyond the traditional "spinoff" model. These new modes must strengthen the technical competence of US industry while avoiding pork projects and other forms of economic inefficiency, and while avoiding government interference in the private sector.

Because of your role as an influential figure in this field, I would like to ask you to provide a brief endorsement for the book for possible use on the dust jacket or in future advertising -- if upon perusing the book you think it has merit, of course. It is easiest to get the flavor of the book by perusing chapters 1, 11, and 12, which convey the thrust of our analysis.

Since the authors will be embarrassed if you praise the book and even more embarrassed if you damn it, please bypass us and fax your comments directly to Richard A. Luecke, Acquisitions Editor, Harvard Business School Press, fax 617-496-8066 (tel. 617-495-6147).

Your comments would be most helpful if they reached Mr. Luecke by February 10.

Thank you for considering this request.

All the best,

DRAFT TALKING PAPER ON BEYOND SPINOFF BY CARTER, ET AL

(prepared by Doug Beason)

January 21, 1992

Overview

- Main thesis is that the U.S. cannot rely on "spin offs" to enhance commercial competitiveness and maintain military security. Book covers:
 - The problem (new world order, changing role of technology in military) including current technology policy
 - The history of technology "spin offs" and where it has failed (or succeeded)
 - Introduction to "Dual Use" (government & commercial uses) philosophy
 - And recommendations on their new policy
- The book is well-written, erudite and has many good points
- However, to say the book is filled with "land mines" for DAB is an understatement: filled with "tactical nuclear weapons" is a more appropriate metaphor

Caveats

- Carter et al's book runs counter to current Administration policy in three areas:
(1) Technology policy, (2) R&D implementation, and (3) "Spin off"
- Plus, other criticisms levied at the Administration would bring embarrassment if DAB endorsed this book
 - Charges of "hypocritical" from outside the Administration
 - "Unsupportive" from inside
- I have highlighted some blatant examples:
 - p45: "U.S. technology policy has never been clearly defined."
"...federal agencies have never paid much attention to industrial technologies..."
 - p51: "...[Japan and Germany] have well-developed support systems for commercial technology, while the United States does not."
 - p53: "... U.S. government policies contribute to underinvestments ..."
 - p81: "A simple view of spinoff is attractive to policy makers because it suggests that the United States can reap serendipitous benefits without deliberate policies."
 - p346: "DoD funding for manufacturing R&D should be increased ..."
 - p347: "The Administration should begin a comprehensive program for strengthening the manufacturing technology infrastructure, with the ultimate objective of a network of several hundred centers for manufacturing R&D and industrial extension."
 - p349: "Federal initiatives should raise priorities for manufacturing ..."
 - p374-378: contrasting policy of government "not picking losers" and "winners"
 - p380: "The United States needs technology policies of two types."

Recommendations

- DAB should not endorse this book
 - Too political
 - Does not support (or propagate) Administration policy
- Even a noncommittal statement could be construed as endorsement
 - Editors work with a literary license!

Dear Dr. Bisconti:

Many thanks for sending me the public opinion leaflet for December 1991. This sort of information is extremely useful to me in the many talks that I find myself giving at various points in the country and I would very much appreciate your keeping me on the list for them.

With all best wishes for the new Year,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed:

Many thanks for your letter of January 27 with all its news. I was indeed a great pleasure to see both of you at Strasbourg and, as always, the Strasbourgeoise carried off the occasion with very real style.

Unfortunately, I have become somewhat immune to strange statements from our friends in particle physics after at least 30 years of fighting off such remarks at Yale. I regret to say that now that I am away from my laboratory there, it is under increasing attack and the outcome is not yet clear.

I want to congratulate you on the remarkable achievements that you mention from your laboratory and for the continued high record of excellence that you have maintained throughout your tenure as Director. Your data on the nuclear defamiation of 165 Holmium is spectacular. Please also convey my personal congratulations to Jim Koster on winning the 1992 Dissertation Award of the DNP.

With warmest best wishes,

Dear Allan:

It was indeed a pleasure to see you in Strasbourg in early December. I think everybody (in particular, Andre Gallmann and Walter) appreciated the fact that you would take time from your busy schedule to attend these ceremonies. Your presence added the right touch.

I've enclosed an ad from Physics Today with what I consider an outlandish statement. It is hard to support our brother scientists when they make such remarks. I always thought that accolades should come from one's fellow workers, publicized by the press, and used to impress the Federal agencies and benefit the public in general. On the other hand, one might expect this kind of desperate attitude from the same people who claim to have invented the Nuclear Magnetic Resonance technique. The only conclusion I can draw is that they don't care whom they offend. I know the SSC is not supposed to impact basic research, but with the huge operating budget I envision, I see a negative impact on all science in the U.S.

To end with a pleasant note, TUNL now has about 34 graduate students in house and we have about 165 Ph.D.s in the field (1/3 industry, 1/3 universities and 1/3 national laboratories). We are still pushing our understanding of the basic laws of physics such as chaotic systems, parity violation, time reversal, the two body force, the tensor force, charge symmetry breaking and charge independence breaking. Enclosed are write-ups of two recent noteworthy accomplishments.

Our atomic beam polarized ion source is producing 100 μ amps of positive beam and 10 μ amps of negative beam. It is being copied in about ten laboratories on the world scene and is being considered for the injector at Fermi Lab. Not bad for a small lab!

Sincerely yours,

Edward G. Bilpuch

Dear Dr. Bauer:

Thank you for your letter of November 11 inviting me to be the dinner speaker at the First Regional Materials Network Meeting scheduled for April 9, 1992, in Denver, Colorado. My apologies for the much belated response.

Because we are very heavily involved in materials science matters, I would have liked to contribute to your organization's efforts to this end. Unfortunately, I have a long-standing commitment on the date in question so I must regretfully decline your invitation.

Thank you for thinking of me and let me offer my best wishes for a successful meeting.

Dear Russell:

I am, of course, happy to write to Dean Gardner on your behalf and have done so.

I assume that the post in question would allow you to maintain your contact with the Argonne National Laboratory since it would be a great pity were you not able to follow up on some of the beautiful work that you have been doing in the recent past.

Please do keep in touch and if there is anything further that I can do to be helpful please let me know.

With warmest best wishes for a happy, healthy and very regarding 1992 to all the Betts.

Dear Mr. Cronin:

I am responding to your letter of November 10 in which you requested introductions to parties who might be interested in the activities of your corporation. I regret that it would be inappropriate for this office to undertake such introductions but would suggest that you contact Dr. Robert Simon in the Office of Energy Research, Department of Energy, and Dr. Robert White, the Under Secretary for Technology, Department of Commerce, both of whom have the appropriate mechanisms for making the connections that you have in mind.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dr. Cooper:

Thank you for your letter of January 20, 1992, to President Bush.

I strongly agree with your basic thesis that technology is the key to economic growth. However, creating technologies is not enough. Translating them into products and manufacturing them at high quality and low cost are of equal, if not greater, importance.

Thank you for sharing your thoughts on this important topic with the President and his staff.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALLAN BROMLEY

FROM:

D.A. HENDERSON

SUBJECT:

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENTAL BIOLOGY

Mary is to be congratulated in her efforts to bring form and substance to an as yet ill-defined but important area. By the very nature of the FCCSET process, the Subcommittee meetings have served to bring together a heterogeneous group from the different agencies and from this process, collaborative efforts are emerging as well as an identification of undersupported efforts.

To me, the pace of activity and scope of work is about right. This is a field which requires a period for growth and maturity. Meanwhile, Tom Lovejoy and his colleagues should be more than satisfied. I think they are.

Memorandum to Dr. D. Allan Bromley

Subject: Support of Environmental Biology Research by the U.S.
Government

Last November I made a presentation to PCAST on biodiversity in the context of the larger issue of environmental biology. Several questions related to current programs, fundamental knowledge needs, coordination across agencies and international activities emerged from our discussion. The purpose of this memorandum is to provide a status report on activities subsequent to the meeting.

Subcommittee on Environmental Biology

The first activity following the PCAST meeting was the formation of the Subcommittee on Environmental Biology under the FCCSET Committee on Life Sciences (CLSH) in January, 1992. Jim Mason asked me to chair it. Our first task was to identify and describe current Federal programs supporting environmental biology research. At present there is no coordinated review of these programs across agencies that reported a total investment in 1990 of more than $379 million.

We have organized our analyses around two related themes: biodiversity and ecological processes. Biodiversity refers to (i) biotic inventories, surveys, and systematic biology; (ii) the set of ecological, genetic and behavioral processes that create and sustain biodiversity; and (iii) various approaches that support conservation of biological diversity and restoration of degraded habitats. Ecological processes stresses (i) the understanding of fundamental processes such as physiological and behavioral responses to environmental forcings, and (ii) consideration for biochemical and genetic mechanisms controlling processes in ecosystems that are subject to natural variations and human influences.

Data on Agency Activities

We have solicited information from agencies on FY 1991/1992 activities. No projections were obtained for FY 1993 and outyears, and the scope of the survey is not considered an interagency crosscut. The broad interest in environmental biology is reflected by the large number of agencies participating in the survey. At this point, eleven agencies have provided data, and for some of the cabinet departments, bureaus and services within departments also participated.

A scientific description of research supported on environmental biology was requested. Also, information was requested on: purpose of research (motivating factors), expected products, level of effort (FY 1991/1992 funds), and performer (in-house, Federal labs, universities, etc.)

While we do not have final submissions from all agencies, some interesting points have emerged. I should point out that we have had enthusiastic support from all agencies, especially those representatives working on the subcommittee. What we are doing is seen as missing and sorely needed.

1. The Federal government's investment in "environmental biology" is larger than expected. Even with some potentially large datasets still in process, the investment in the FY 1991 period was over $700 million. This exceeds, by nearly a factor of two, the estimate derived from data reported by agencies to NSF's Division of Science Resource Studies (SRS) which I reported to PCAST and to the CLSH (a total of $379 million). Clearly, further examination is needed.

Next Step: We have begun discussions with SRS on how data are collected within agencies and transmitted to SRS, but it is clear that reconciling this matter is a longer term task.

2. For good reasons related to the mission of individual agencies, there are many ways that data on research are archived. While agencies worked conscientiously with the rather general taxonomy we selected, there are problems with interpretation, aggregation, and the like. However, it should be possible to reach consensus on a taxonomy that would make future data more directly comparable, and with little additional effort. There are many good reasons to develop such a taxonomy given the complexity of the issue and the continuing prominence of environmental questions before us.

Next Step: One of the group's recommendations should be to develop a taxonomy of environmental biology research that can be easily applied to all agencies. The goal of such a taxonomy should be to facilitate information flow and cooperation in sharing existing knowledge, identifying needed research and recommending joint programs where appropriate.

3. In the area of ecological processes, the category that appears to have the lowest level of support was physiological/biochemical ecology of organisms and associated genetic controls. This suggests a need to foster programmatic bridges between biochemical and genetic approaches and ecological approaches in order to develop a set of first principles that can be applied in prediction and extrapolation of research results beyond the limits of a single experiment.

4. "Habitat analysis" (here used to categorize the set of research activities needed to understand, manage and restore, as needed, a habitat resource) is not well supported, although some of this type of activity may be embedded in other categories. If further analysis reveals this to be truly neglected but important, then it might be a candidate for interagency action.

5. In contrast to the biomedical field, where the dominant research performers are scientists at colleges and universities, the pattern in environmental biology research is significantly skewed toward performance within agencies, or if performed outside the agencies, most support is allocated on the basis of formula funding or contracts. This raises issues related to resource allocation and the role of individual or groups of investigators at universities and colleges.

Next Step: Immediate plans are to proceed with this analysis, resulting in a published report from the subcommittee. These data should be instructive to several outside groups presently conducting analyses of the Federal effort in the area of the environment, as well as helpful to the agencies to better understand each other and to coordinate relevant activities.

Communication

We have established a liaison with the Committee on Earth and Environmental Science's Subcommittee on Global Change Research. We have received a briefing from the Executive Secretary of the NAS Committee on the Environment on activities of that group. As an outcome, we have agreed to review materials prepared by that committee describing Federal agency activities. Several of us have briefed other groups involved with analysis activities on environmental research, such as the Carnegie Commission on the Environment.

Next Step: We will brief CEES or relevant subcommittees, such as Global Change Research, on our findings by the end of November.

I will provide you with a complete report when this analysis has been completed.

Mary

Dear Ash:

I have just nominated J. Thomas Ratchford for membership in the Council on Foreign Relations and would much appreciate it if you would be good enough to provide a seconding letter on Tom's behalf to:

Mr. Kempton Dunn
Director of Membership and Fellowship Affairs
Council on Foreign Relations, Incorporated
58 East 68th Street
New York, New York 10021

For your convenience, I am enclosing herewith a copy of a recent curriculum vitae that Tom prepared. As you know, the Council's membership group in particular is interested in international experience and the letters are particularly helpful when they contain some personal experience or anecdote that might add to the formal sort of material that usually comes to the committee with the nominating initiative itself.

Tom has done an outstanding job as my Associate Director for Policy and International Affairs and I believe that he would be a very effective and interesting member of the Council on Foreign Relations. Your support would be much appreciated.

With warmest best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Marty:

Please forgive the very long delay in getting back to your letter in which you ask for suggestions concerning potential career opportunities. I have given the question some thought and it seems to me that at this point your salary expectations will probably be far beyond anything that is possible within the federal system. That being the case, I have the feeling that you would be best advised to consider the possibility of joining one of what is all too frequently referred to as the beltway bandits despite the fact that many of these organizations do outstandingly good work. I might suggest SRI, for example, or perhaps EPRI as being particularly good targets because of your background and experience. You might also consider one of the conical consulting firms like McKinsey or Booz Allen because they too have a substantial and growing interest in the high technology areas.

Right at the moment, DOE is in the process of down-sizing its staff and here in OSTP, for example, we are already up to our full staff complement so that there is nothing that I could suggest for you here.

Unfortunately, I did not get back to you in time to respond to your P.S. but I was out of the country on June 22 and 23 in any event. Let me simply send along my congratulations to your daughter Amy for her success in the NEED program.

Let me know what you decide to do with respect to applications or contacts with the consulting firms or the beltway bandits and I shall be happy to write appropriate letters of reference.

With all best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

July 16, 1992

Dear Ed:

Many thanks for sending me a copy of your excellent commencement address. I was, of course, pleased to see a small piece of my remarks at William and Mary and I can assure you that I will return the favor by lifting pieces from your address for future use. Naturally with attribution.

It was a pleasure meeting you at William and Mary and I send you every best wish.

Sincerely yours,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'D. Bromley', with a stylized, flowing script.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

June 1, 1992

Dear Mr. Castaing:

Thank you for your letter of May 8 inviting me to attend the Technology Exchange Exposition scheduled for June 9 and 10 in Auburn Hills, Michigan.

As much as I would like to join you, that date on my calendar is not a good one for me to be away from Washington, so I must regretfully decline.

Thank you for thinking of me and I would like to offer my best wishes for a successful exposition.

Sincerely yours,

A handwritten signature in dark ink, appearing to read "D. Allan Bromley". The signature is fluid and cursive, with the first name "D. Allan" and the last name "Bromley" clearly distinguishable.

D. Allan Bromley
The Assistant to the President for Science and Technology
