PHONE CALL FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: ZSA ZSA GABOR

Zsa Zsa Gabor called for the President to express her support for the reappointment of Vincent Hazi as the Hungarian Ambassador to the United States. She feels the person under serious consideration will damage Hungary -- (it is one of President Kadar's secretaries (??))

She did NOT want the President, or anyone else to return her call. She was only concerned that her message be relayed. She was very difficult to understand.

FORCES LOYAL TO DENG TIGHTEN HOLD ON CITY
Up To 400,000 Troops Said To Ring Beijing

BEIJING -- Supported by tens of thousands of fresh troops, the forces loyal to senior leader Deng Xiaoping and President Yang Shangkun tightened their grip on the Chinese capital city.

Western military experts said an estimated 300,000 to 400,000 Chinese troops now ring the capital, many of them ordered in from elsewhere in China by Yang...and his brother, Gen. Yang Baibing, chief of the Chinese army's political department....

The possibility of civil war erupting in China appeared to be less grave as troops of the 27th Army, who are believed to be loyal to Yang, slowly extended their control and moved troops closer to the positions of potentially rebellious units.

Despite confusion surrounding the political situation, the government appeared to be assuming a more visible role. The Foreign Ministry, reacting to Washington's decision to suspend military sales to Beijing, called the action a "detriment to bilateral relations." ...

"Speaking for Pakistan, I can declare that we do not possess, nor do we intend to make, a nuclear device. That is our policy," she said....

IRAN READY TO HELP RELEASE U.S. HOSTAGES IN LEBANON: SPEAKER

TEHRAN -- Iran's parliamentary speaker Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani Thursday offered to help release U.S. hostages in Lebanon. But he linked his offer to U.S. help in tracing Iranian nationals believed held by Christian militiamen in Lebanon.

The Iranian news agency IRNA quoted Rafsanjani as telling a news conference in Tehran:

LITTLE CHANGE SEEN IN IRAN'S PATH
Khomeini's Political Will Is Published, Reinforces Radicals

TEHRAN -- Under strict instruction from the will of the late Ayatollah Khomeini not to deviate from his path, Iran's new leadership appears unlikely to move quickly to improve relations with the West, according to political analysts here.

Khomeini's will, the last segment of which was published today, represents a harsh and constraining political creed that could be invoked by a formidable coalition of radicals seeking to block any moderate consensus aimed to rebuild Iran's war-devastated economy and end its isolation with much of the world....

VICE PRESIDENT QUAYLE URGES ISRAEL TO STOP JEWISH SETTLEMENTS

JERUSALEM -- Vice President Quayle, in an interview with the Jerusalem Post published Thursday, urged Israel to stop building Jewish settlements in the occupied territories.

"These announcements of new settlements are politically problematic even if they don't go through with it," Quayle was quoted as saying.

He reaffirmed Washington's strong support for Israel but said new settlements helped Israel's critics in the U.S. to put pressure on the Jewish state to make concessions to the Palestinians.

"It just gives them (the critics) fodder for the cannon fire, and believe me, they want to unload on Israel," Quayle said. (Reuter)

FOR BUSH, CHANCES TO CHART A COURSE

The barrage of dramatic and historic developments abroad has given President Bush the opportunity to make fundamental decisions about the long-term course of U.S. foreign policy, according to specialists in international relations.

The analysts...gave Bush generally high marks for his performance to date. In particular, they agreed that the President performed well by offering a sweeping arms-control proposal and resolving an in-house conflict last week at the NATO summit.

At the same time, they said Bush's approach to foreign policy had been marked by often undue caution and a reliance on short-term tactics.

...Through Secretary of State Baker, this administration has tried hard to work with the Congress....

Critics say [this attention to official Washington] is a symptom of a problem with the administration's approach -- that it often treats foreign policy as a domestic concern, with the principal aim being to satisfy Capitol Hill and American public opinion. (Adam Pertman, Boston Globe)

MOSCOW -- Soviet Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov has hinted Moscow is developing its long-promised, low-cost rival to the U.S. "Star Wars" program for strategic defense in space.

U.S. SEEKS TO END CONTRAS' BASE IN MIAMI, REBELS SAY

In an increasingly nasty squabble between allies, the leaders of Nicaragua's rebels are complaining that the Bush administration wants them to disband their political operation in Miami and go back to Nicaragua -- or lose their CIA subsidies.

Administration officials, frustrated at what they see as the Contra leaders' guerrilla warfare against U.S. policy, have responded by accusing some rebel leaders of preferring the easy life in exile to the rigors of the political struggle in Central America.

"Did 7,000 contras die so a small handful of their leaders could live in Miami, travel first-class and stay in the Ritz Carlton Hotel?" one administration official asked heatedly....

"We're telling them: No more dole unless you go back to Nicaragua or go live in the military camps," said another administration official.

"If I go back, it will be according to my own decision, not someone else's policy," said...Adolfo Calero.

$6.2 BILLION PLEDGED TO MEXICO

MADRID -- At least $6.27 billion will be made available by international agencies and governments to finance reduction of Mexico's foreign debt and interest payments, New York Federal Reserve Bank President Gerald Corrigan told commercial bankers and Mexican officials at a conference here today....

"There is clear pressure emerging from the U.S. government to find a solution to Mexico's problems," said a key international official. "The debt issue will come up at the economic summit in Paris next month, and the Bush administration wants a deal for Mexico before that."

But few people at the conference were ready to predict that timetable could be met. (Hobart Rowen, Washington Post, E1)

GOP AIDE QUILTS OVER FOLEY MEMO Bush Says Attack On House Speaker Is 'Disgusting'

The communications director at the Republican National Committee resigned under fire Wednesday for his role in an attack on Speaker Foley that President Bush called "disgusting" and that some Democrats said should lead to the firing of RNC Chairman Atwater.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Bush told Atwater early Wednesday morning that a mailing to party leaders written by RNC communications director Mark Goodin was "disgusting" and that such tactics should not be repeated. But Bush, Fitzwater said, "has full confidence in Lee...he has...proven his value." ...

Democratic National Committee Chairman Ronald Brown said Goodin, who abruptly resigned Wednesday morning, should not "take the fall" for an operation that is "up to its knees in sewer-style politics." Brown called on Bush to remove Atwater....

Republican Party Deputy Resigns After Foley Memo Outrage

Goodin's departure, along with Foley's extraordinary public denial that he is a homosexual, appeared to have cauterized the festering rumors that have bedeviled Foley these last few weeks, left many Republicans chastened and, for the time being, muted the rhetoric that has gripped the House over the last several weeks....

Foley, confronting head-on the rumors he had sidestepped publicly the day before, told CNN, "I am, of course, not a homosexual." ...

Republicans who know [RNC Chairman] Atwater and Goodin, who are friends, said privately they could not imagine Goodin taking such a politically risky step without consulting the party chairman.

Yet in his [resignation] letter to Atwater, Goodin noted that he had prepared and disseminated the memorandum "without your knowledge or approval." ...

[Moreover], when Atwater saw its contents, one party official said, "he almost threw up."

Sununu, Bush Upset Over RNC Memo Flap

A national Republican Party official resigned Wednesday in the uproar over a memo he wrote comparing Speaker Foley's voting record with that of a homosexual congressman.

President Bush was described as "disgusted by this entire incident" and has considered it closed....

"The President was very upset," said White House Chief of Staff Sununu in an interview reported in Thursday editions of The New York Times. "I was upset. It went too far. It was wrong. The innuendo was wrong. It's not wrong because it damages our relationship with the Democrats. It's wrong because it's wrong."

GOP SQUABBLES OVER TACTICS AFTER 'SLEAZY' SMEAR OF FOLEY

The Republican Party, having violated the dictum of its own leader that you never attack your enemies while they are in the process of destroying themselves, is now at war with itself....

Republicans in Congress were outraged over what some privately called the "sleaziness" of [RNC communications director] Goodin's "assassination by innuendo." ...

But GOP lawmakers and even a former Atwater associate suggested the "attack dog" atmosphere created by Atwater, Edward Rollins at the NRCC and Rep. Gingrich might have led Goodin to believe that he was only carrying out the spirit, if not the letter, of the agenda set by his elders in the party.

"They have indeed made a serious error," said a GOP political consultant and former senior Bush campaign official....

"The Democratic corruption story was moving of its own accord," said the former Atwater associate. "Their interventions have enabled the Democrats to distract attention away from themselves and to Republicans."

NETWORK NEWS SUMMARY

(Wednesday Evening, June 7)

CHINA

CBS's Dan Rather: The exodus from Beijing gained urgency today. The U.S. ambassador to China ordered families of U.S. officials evacuated after Chinese troops terrorized a diplomatic compound, spraying bullets into apartment buildings that house American and other foreign citizens. Witnesses said more Chinese were killed by gunfire on the streets of Beijing. Violence is also reported in half a dozen other Chinese cities. The political situation remains murky, obscure. But the army has tightened its grip on the blood-soaked streets of the capital.

CBS's John Sheahan reports that soldiers in Beijing fired wildly into hotels and foreigners' homes today, and more Chinese civilians were gunned down in the streets. The military siege of Beijing looks like it's just beginning. As the threat of imminent war between rival army units recedes, there is increasing combat between the military and the people. Nightly attacks with Molotov cocktails and firearms. Soldiers laid down a barrage of fire in the air and into diplomats' apartments, apparently in a trigger-happy attempt to discourage sniping. U.S. Ambassador James Lilley is trying to find out who's in charge of the Chinese government. He can't get past lower level officials. Beijing Airport is hopelessly overcrowded with foreigners trying to get on flights -- flights to anywhere as long as it's out.

CBS's Bill Plante reports that as Americans converged on the Beijing Airport to escape the deteriorating situation in China, the U.S. government came under sharp criticism for being slow to react. Today the State Department took action to help U.S. citizens get out of China.

(State Department Spokeswoman Tutwiler: "The United States government is arranging charters that will supplement U.S. airlines to facilitate the departure of all those who want to leave and all those who have been ordered to leave.")

Returning Americans had few kind words for the U.S. Embassy.

(U.S. citizen: "Every other country's embassy was there picking up their students, and they said to call them if there was trouble. By then it would be obviously too late.")

(U.S. citizen: "I think the American Embassy in Beijing is a disaster. They've done absolutely nothing for the overwhelming majority of people who are there whose lives are at risk. They're useless.")

(Sen. Adams: "Be prepared, do a better job of it next time, and for goodness' sake, complete this one quickly and get our people out of there.")

According to officials here, not only does the U.S. government not have a clue which members of the hard-line faction are actually in charge in China or what's likely to happen next, but also that the State Department has no records of which Americans have already left, and that it can only guess how many U.S. citizens remain in China.

Rather: President Bush has refused to pull the U.S. ambassador out of Beijing, saying the U.S. government badly needs that contact with the Chinese leadership. Today reportedly there was high-level contact between the U.S. ambassador and some Chinese officials.

CBS's Lesley Stahl reports that U.S. analysts here are now assuming that Deng Xiaoping and the other hard-liners do have the upper hand and are making the important government decisions. One reason for that assessment is a meeting that our U.S. ambassador had with their vice foreign minister, someone officials here say is in the clear line of command. Lilley vigorously protested those shootings at the American compound and was assured that there is no deliberate move to harm Americans. Other evidence the hard-liners have consolidated power. Premier Li Peng mentioned on state-controlled radio for the first time since the violence he was attending a ceremonial function. The government has formally condemned President Bush's action in suspending military sales and in granting asylum to Fang Lizhi in the American Embassy. White House spokesmen say President Bush is certain that the steps he took were the right ones. No one here is saying that the hard-liners have definitely won. President Bush, based on his own experience in China, is telling aides that the more you learn about China the more you realize you don't understand, and that's because the Chinese want it that way. (CBS-Lead)

NBC's Garrick Utley: There is no let up this evening in the fear of those caught up in the tragedy of China or the uncertainty of what it will lead to. No one, of course, knows what is happening in the inner circle of China's leaders, but the outward signs show the hard-liners are firmly in control and determined to assert that control.

NBC's Keith Miller reports that Beijing Radio reported Premier Li Peng attended meetings today along with the Chinese president. It was the Communist Party's way of telling the public who was in charge of the country. The people were also given a warning on the same broadcast that anyone violating martial law or resisting arrest will be subject to immediate execution.

Utley reports that the State Department today ordered all dependents of U.S. government personnel in China and all non-essential government employees to leave that country. It also urged any other Americans in China to get out at once.

NBC's George Lewis reports that Americans who got to the Beijing Airport today found that all the planes were full. Airlines serving the Chinese capital had long waiting lists. Those stuck at the airport were angry about the U.S. Embassy's handling of the evacuation.

(University of Buffalo law professor Stephen Halpern: "I think the American Embassy in Beijing is a disaster. They've done absolutely nothing for the overwhelming majority of people who are there whose lives are at risk. They're useless. They've been useless for several days. It's a disgrace.")

The U.S. Embassy said that starting tomorrow special charter flights would begin landing in Beijing to get Americans out of China.

Utley says that demonstrations were reported today in at least 10 major cities outside the capital. In Shanghai, the opposition is growing rapidly. Fang Lizhi has been given refuge at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing. Today the Chinese government formally protested that, calling it an interference in China's internal affairs. The government also criticized President Bush for suspending the sale of American arms and for condemning the killing of students in Beijing. (NBC-Lead)

ABC's Peter Jennings: Another long and uncertain night is just ending in China. For Americans and other foreigners trying to leave, daylight brings another opportunity. Two jumbo jets chartered by the U.S. government are expected to land in China today. For the first time in a week the Bush Administration believes it is getting a handle on what is happening. U.S. intelligence sources conclude there's been no major change at the top of the Chinese government. Deng Xiaoping and his more rigid supporters in the party are still in charge. Intelligence sources also confirm news reports of sporadic clashes between various army units. (ABC-Lead)

RNC MEMO

Rather: Top Republicans from President Bush on down scrambled today to disown, denounce, and distance themselves from a RNC memo attacking new Speaker of the House Foley. After making sure the memo got out, the communications director of the RNC took responsibility for writing it, said higher-ups had no part in it, and then resigned.

CBS's Bob Schieffer reports that Mark Goodin, who authored the memo which termed Foley as an "out of the liberal closet" and compared his voting record to that of Massachusetts' openly homosexual Rep. Barney Frank, resigned. Today embarrassed Republicans admitted the rough stuff that's become too routine lately finally went too far.

(Sen. Dole: "This is not politics, this is garbage.")

Republican Party Chairman Atwater apologized to Foley, but said the memo was not his doing.

(Atwater: "I will be spending more time personally viewing what goes out than I obviously have in the past. Had I seen this I feel very confident that it wouldn't have gone out.")

The President, who met with Foley today, said he, too, was disgusted with the memo, but Foley, himself, seemed ready to move on to other things. Other Democrats were enraged and said the President must ultimately shoulder the blame himself. They saw it all as part of a pattern begun during the presidential campaign, when they said the President took the high road while others did the dirty work. As far as the Democrats are concerned, the bad cop all along has been Atwater. Tonight Ron Brown said Atwater ought to resign, too.

(CBS-2)

NBC's Andrea Mitchell reports that the new Speaker came to the White House for lunch with the President amidst a political storm over a Republican smear campaign against Foley. The White House said the President was disgusted, angry about the RNC memo.

Mitchell continues:

(Speaker Foley: "I think the issue is closed. I think it's closed. The issue is closed.")

Until today, RNC Chairman Atwater defended the memo as a legitimate political tactic. But last night, after getting angry calls from House Republicans and talking to the President, Atwater called Foley to apologize. And today, the man who wrote the memo, Atwater protege Mark Goodin, resigned as the party's communications chief.

(Atwater: "He exercised very poor judgement at the wrong time, at the wrong place, and he's having to suffer for it.")

Not good enough, say some Democrats. They point out that Atwater is Bush's buddy and hand-picked party chairman known for playing political hardball. They want Bush to clean up the RNC and Atwater to resign. Foley has said that Atwater's apology ends the matter for him. He is known to be upset that people are calling for more resignations, wishing instead that everyone would just let the issue die.

(NBC-4)

ABC's Jim Wooten reports that in several television appearances today, the new Speaker said he is not a homosexual, and having received an apology from RNC Chairman Atwater, he considered the subject closed. According to Marlin Fitzwater, the President was also disgusted with the memo, and at a luncheon with Speaker Foley today told him so. The President is said to have sternly reprimanded Atwater today, but Democratic Chairman Brown wants a little more than that. He says Goodin is just a fall guy, that Atwater ought to share the blame and also resign.

(ABC-5)

PRIME MINISTER BHUTTO

Utley: Also on Capitol Hill today, a visitor from Pakistan, Prime Minister Bhutto. She told Congress what a lot of people in this country wanted to hear, that Pakistan does not have and does not intend to build nuclear weapons.

(NBC-5)

Jennings: On Capitol Hill, a warning today from the Prime Minister of Pakistan. Prime Minister Bhutto told the Congress that the Soviet Union is making major arms shipments to the government of Afghanistan, and she called for more support for the Afghan rebels. Prime Minister Bhutto also said that Pakistan does not have nuclear weapons. She promised that Pakistan would allow safeguards against nuclear proliferation and inspection if other countries, including India, agree to the same.

SURINAME PLANE CRASH

Utley reports that in thick fog a DC-8 jetliner crashed while trying to land in Suriname. At least 169 people were killed. The Suriname Airways jet made three attempts to land. On the third it hit a tree, then crashed and broke apart. Only 13 people survived. The flight had come from Amsterdam. Suriname Airways had leased the plane from an unidentified U.S. company, and the pilot, co-pilot and engineer were Americans. Because an American crew and a U.S.-made plane were involved in the accident, the National Transportation Safety Board has sent investigators to the scene of that tragedy.

AIRLINES

Utley: The Bush Administration took its first big step today to fight airline domination of certain markets in the development of hub airports. The Department of Justice announced it will try to block U.S. Air from increasing its hold on Philadelphia's airport, where it already handles half of all passenger traffic. A congressional report out today says that air fares at hubs dominated by one or two airlines are, on average, 27% higher than at other airports. (NBC-7)

RANCHO SECO

Rather reports that California's Rancho Seco nuclear power plant is preparing for shutdown -- the first time a working reactor complex has been voted out of business at the polls. Fifty-three percent of those turning out for yesterday's balloting voted for shutdown. Rancho Seco's board members said they would abide by the public's wishes.

AIDS

ABC's George Strait reports that in a remarkable reversal in tone, the head of the National Cancer Institute told the delegates to an international AIDS conference today that because of the rapid advances in drug development, AIDS within the next five to seven years will likely go from a disease that is rapidly and universally fatal to a disease that can be managed.

ENVIRONMENTALISTS (Prepared by OPD)

I want to thank you all for coming to this meeting to share your concerns, in particular about the Clean Air Act.

I have a strong commitment to the environment and seek your help in carrying out my campaign commitments.

Already we have taken some important environmental steps:

- Calling for the phase-out of CFCs by the year 2000.
- Commitment to engage in negotiations on a framework convention on global warming.
- Commitment to seeking legislation banning hazardous waste exports absent a bilateral agreement to assure adequate handling.

- Progress on Corporate Average Fleet Economy standards.
- Two Forks decision.
- Commitment to submitting legislation on pollution prevention and recycling.
- Strong, consistent emphasis on enforcement and on environmental priorities.

On our agenda:

- We are looking at amendments to pesticide law to streamline a cumbersome regulatory process for cancelling problem pesticides.

- We are committed to a "no net loss" of wetlands policy, the Domestic Policy Council Working Group on this will begin meeting in the next couple of weeks to see how we can institutionalize this goal.
- Strengthened enforcement and management of Superfund, with Administrator Reilly's 90 day review, due out next week (week of June 12) as a guide.

As you know, I plan to announce my Clean Air proposals on Monday, June 12. Before I do so, I would like to hear from you today on what direction we should be going on acid rain, non-attainment and air toxics.

- By how much should we reduce SO₂?
- What is a realistic date for allowing the use of clean coal technologies?

- To achieve attainment of the ozone and carbon monoxide standards, to what extent should we look to alternative fuels?

- one on non-attainment of standards for ozone and carbon monoxide
- one on toxic air emissions

I would like to take a minute to put on the table some key questions for each one.

ACID RAIN

By now, it is no secret that my Administration would like to use market forces to the greatest extent possible in achieving reductions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides. I would expect that this will be reflected in our proposal.

This leaves open the following questions:

- By how much should we reduce SO₂?

- What deadline is appropriate?
- How broadly should the reductions be allocated, at least initially, before any trading takes place? Should they be targeted at a handful of plants -- or spread more widely to all old plants that are contributing to the problem?
- How broadly should we allow trading -- between plants in a utility system? Between all plants in a state? Or between all plants in all states covered by the bill?
- What is a realistic date for allowing the use of clean coal technology?

OZONE AND NON-ATTAINMENT

This is a tough standard to meet, but we are committed to providing clean air for all Americans. I would envision a mix of controls -- many similar to those incorporated in bills now pending on the Hill -- to bring areas into attainment. My own view is that we should judge possible ozone controls by their cost-effectiveness; we should pick those controls that can be implemented at the lowest dollar cost per ton of pollutant reduction.

- What is your view of the Group of Nine bill?
- As you know, I have been a strong supporter of alternative fuels. You may have heard that we are considering an alternative fuels component of this bill. I would welcome your views on how aggressive an alternative fuels plan is warranted. How broadly should it apply?

AIR TOXICS

What is the best way to control air toxics?

- Should we target our efforts at eliminating "unreasonable risk" to the public?
- Should we move toward a standard set on the basis of technology -- on the basis of what our best practices will allow us to achieve?
- Or should we pick a health-based standard and simply mandate that plants meet it?
- How do you view the Dingell bill, and what are its drawbacks?

MOTOR VEHICLE INDUSTRY PROGRESS IN CLEAN AIR

The progress in taking the auto out of the clean air issue is unparalleled. Compared with pre-controlled cars of the 1960s, 96% of the exhaust hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide and 76% of the oxides of nitrogen have been eliminated. Similar cuts have been made in truck emissions.

Since less than half of the vehicles on the road today were built to meet the most recent emissions standards, there will be further dramatic reductions in total motor vehicle emissions as new, cleaner cars replace older ones. These older vehicles account for almost 90% of vehicle hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide and 70% of the oxides of nitrogen even though they account for only about 40% of the miles driven.

With emission standards and fuel volatility policies now in place, as the existing fleet of vehicles is replaced, total automotive emissions will be reduced by 40 to 50% in the next 15 years or so. This will happen even if no new standards or programs are adopted. By comparison, even a stringent new standard of .25 grams per mile of hydrocarbons would result in only about 1% more control than will happen automatically.

While outstanding progress is being made, we nonetheless support reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. We believe there is a future for alternative fuels and are ready to support pilot programs to determine the best way to move forward. For existing cars, we think that inspection and maintenance programs should be strengthened and we support oxygenated fuel blends which can reduce certain emissions. We are also working on technologies that will smooth the flow of traffic and reduce congestion. The "intelligent vehicle" and "intelligent highway" save travel time and fuel and reduce emissions. We also support joint research programs in the environmental area and Ford, Chrysler and GM met recently to move forward on this front.

While a new exhaust standard would result in very little improvement, we recognize that Congress may move in that direction. If so, we urge that four principles should be included in the legislation. First, it should control only non-methane hydrocarbons; there should be separate requirements for certification of vehicles and vehicles in use; there should be no lengthening of "useful life;" and there should be adequate lead time and a phase-in process. Of course, the standards must be technologically feasible and not just increase vehicle recalls that do not improve the air significantly, but are costly and disruptive.

As we approach as near to zero emissions as is technologically possible, the costs become higher and the risks greater. We value cleaner air and we also value jobs and a competitive economy. The auto industry has taken a strong and costly dose of emissions control medicine and we are getting better and better. It is not a time to hit us with new controls which gain little but can hurt the economy and cost people their jobs. The risk is especially high for U.S. manufacturers which produce a full line of vehicles.

It is time to move away from micro management of the clean air program and adopt a flexible approach which can reach these goals through the most cost effective means possible.

INSERT FOR PRESIDENT BUSH'S OPENING STATEMENT

The House of Representatives will vote on the Administration's savings and loan legislation next week. On February 9, I asked Congress to act in 45 days. 119 days have now passed. The whole country knows this is an urgent matter and it is not right to have taken so long to resolve the situation. I urge Congress to resolve its differences and act promptly.

I want to emphasize one point. The American public will pay billions of dollars to clean up this problem, and we must make sure it never happens again. Strong capital requirements are the cornerstone of our reform proposal. S&L's are a business and their owners have a right to make money, but not at the expense of the U.S. taxpayer. These owners should have to put up their own money as the first line of defense against losses.

The American public should never again have to spend billions of dollars to clean up a mess that would not have occurred if the S&L industry had put its own money at risk. This Administration strongly opposes any effort to weaken the capital standards in the legislation.

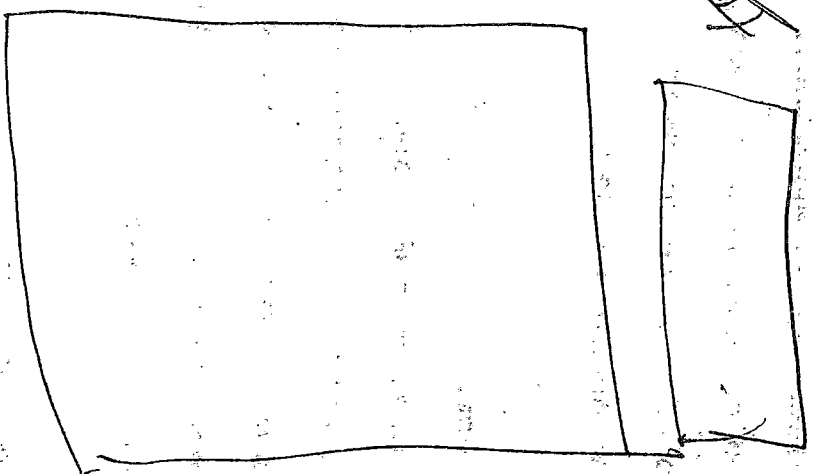

119 days ago I asked for prompt action and I ask for it again. But legislation which puts the taxpayers at risk again is unacceptable.

Dear Commander Pears:

Thank you for your letter of May 1, 1989, asking me to issue a proclamation designating November 11, 1989, as "Armistice Day," in honor of your organization's hosting of the November 11th ceremonies at Arlington National Cemetery.

I think your suggestion is most appropriate. I'm told, however, that the law requires the use of the term "Veterans Day" in the annual November 11th proclamation. I am, therefore, directing the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to ensure that the 1989 proclamation for "Veterans Day" emphasize the significance of November 11th as the day on which the armistice ending World War I was signed.

We will do our best to make sure that proper recognition is given to the invaluable contribution made by you and the other World War I "Doughboys" to our Nation and the world.

Sincerely,

Mr. Don R. Pears

Dear Mr. Niner:

I want to express to you my sincere appreciation for all your work these many months as Deputy Director of the Task Force on Border Control.

When I established this Task Force in May 1988, I knew the challenge to improve control of this Nation's borders against penetration by terrorists, fugitive felons and drug traffickers would be demanding. The background and experience that you brought to this assignment as Deputy Director greatly assisted the Task Force in conducting a most comprehensive study. The Task Force report has already led to improvements relative to border control, and I anticipate additional enhancements as the Task Force recommendations are implemented.

You have my personal thanks for your dedicated effort in this endeavor.

Sincerely,

Dear John:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter concerning the National Aerospace Plane (NASP) program. I apologize for the delay in getting back to you. However, the Department of Defense budget wasn't formalized and submitted to Congress until late April.

As you know, in order to meet our budget and deficit goals, strict budget constraints have been placed on all Federal departments and agencies. In response to these pressures, the Department of Defense has proposed that DOD funding for the NASP program be reduced. This action was taken only after much careful consideration of our national defense needs and of how these needs could be met within the reduced resource levels.

I have directed the National Space Council, under the leadership of the Vice President, to undertake a review of United States policy regarding their NASP program. This review will address program utility, technology, management, and programmatic considerations. The review should be completed by early July.

Let me assure you that the review will be comprehensive and that I will give the recommendations of the Space Council my immediate and close attention.

With appreciation and best wishes,

Sincerely,

Thanks so much for sending the copy of the Chicago Tribune magazine, "Sunday." The article about the four children from Armenia who lost limbs in the earthquake was heartwarming. The miracle of modern medicine and therapy -- applied by caring, professional individuals -- was clearly demonstrated by these children's rehabilitation.

Barbara and I appreciate your sharing this story with us and we thank you and the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago for all your help to the victims of this tragedy.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Finley:

I am deeply saddened by the loss of your son Rick, and the other members of the team in Peru, in the tragic air crash on May 20. I cannot imagine the sense of pain and grief that you must feel at this time.

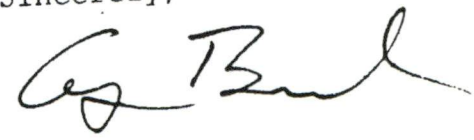

Rick was a brave and committed young man who dedicated his life to the dangerous and violent world of drug enforcement, so that we might fight this terrible scourge of drugs in our society. His decision to go to Peru was perhaps the one which required the greatest courage and commitment of all; yet, I am told that Rick did so without hesitation.

I know of Rick's outstanding record as a police officer on the Little Rock Police Department and of his awards and achievements in five years as a DEA Special Agent. He was highly regarded and was truly the type of fine individual and son that we, as parents, can be proud of. Without men such as Rick, our world would indeed be a dark and threatening place.

Rick was respected and admired by his fellow officers, and will truly be missed by those who value a civilized and lawful society.

Please accept my deepest condolences and those of a grateful Nation.

Sincerely,

Mr. and Mrs. Drexal Finley
