BUSH: 'PACK A GUN AND WE'LL PACK YOU AWAY' President Urges Congress To Pass Anti-Crime Plan

BRUNSWICK, Ga. -- President Bush came to the Georgia coast to promote his $1.2 billion anticrime package in the presence of some of the people who will benefit most from it: federal law enforcement agents.

Speaking at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, Mr. Bush told students and instructors he made the trip "to let you know we intend to back you where it counts -- on the streets and in the courtrooms."

During the visit Bush signed an official message to Congress outlining the plan. He also placed a wreath of red, white and purple flowers at a memorial to 39 federal officers slain in the line of duty who were trained at the law enforcement facility....

The President spoke for about 20 minutes outdoors in humid heat, drawing an enthusiastic response from the federal employees as well as 8,000 residents who gathered in the shade of pine trees to hear him.

BUSH OPENS NEW FRONT IN CRIME WAR President Outlines Plan During Visit To FLETC

BRUNSWICK, Ga. -- President Bush traveled nearly 1,000 miles from Washington, D.C. Thursday to deliver to Congress his 1.2 billion crime-fighting package and the message that it will protect the country's law enforcement officers.

"I came here to Georgia to lay a wreath and to repeat a warning -- better that you had never been born than to attack one of America's finest," the President said during a morning speech at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center just north of here.

"We are going after those who kill or wound our police officers."

Bush Praises 'Freedom Fighters' In War On Crime

GLYNCO, Ga. -- President Bush paid tribute to "domestic freedom fighters in the war on crime" Thursday as he campaigned at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center here for his $1.2 billion anti-crime package to expand the number of officers, prosecutors and prisons.

But a short time later, Judiciary Committee Chairman Biden appeared on the Senate floor to ask where the money was coming from.

Biden said the President had proposed to cut the budget of the Georgia training center by 20 percent....

But the White House responded that the cuts to which Biden referred were in construction accounts and not in the training center's operating budget....

As temperatures rose into the 90s at the southeastern Georgia training center, Bush formally sent to Congress legislation calling for an additional 24,000 prison spaces, 825 federal agents and staff, and 1,600 prosecutors.... Bush began his visit to the government's central law enforcement training center by laying a wreath before a triptych monument to 39 graduates of the center who have been killed in the line of duty.

President Details Anti-Crime Plan

GLYNCO, Ga. -- President Bush officially submitted his anti-crime package to Congress on Thursday after a symbolic show of support for the nation's law enforcement officers.

The President met with students and faculty of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, laid a wreath at a memorial to 39 slain officers and spoke to thousands of crime fighters and townspeople who braved the sizzling heat and humidity of southeast Georgia.

"I am here today to deliver a message...and to repeat a warning -- better that you had never been born than to attack one of America's finest," Bush said.

The President signed the draft legislation for his initiatives at the federal training center in Glynco....

"Usually, this would entail nothing more than a quick flourish of the pen, and then sending an aide on a 10-minute car ride down Pennsylvania Avenue to Capitol Hill," said Bush. "But when it comes to fighting crime, you deserve more than business as usual. And that is why I have come almost a thousand miles to this wonderful center to let you know we intend to back you where it counts -- on the streets and in the courtroom."

Bush Announces His Anti-Crime Package Of More Officers, Funds, Prisons

President Bush promised a receptive audience Thursday that his administration wanted to get tougher with criminals, warning those who assault law enforcement officers that it would be "better that you had never been born than to attack one of America's finest."

In a speech at the Federal Law Enforcement Center, Bush told the officers they had a friend in the Oval Office who supported highly specialized training "to catch today's criminals with tomorrow's methods, to lift the shadow of fear from America."

Under a punishing Georgia sun, Bush shed his coat for the speech after a brief wreath-laying ceremony at a memorial for 39 graduates of the center who have been killed in the line of duty.

The Bush trip was scheduled to coincide with the formal submission to Congress of the President's $1.2 billion anti-crime package.

Bush Sends Anti-Crime Legislation To Congress, Vows Tough War On Criminals

GLYNCO, Ga. -- President Bush, vowing Thursday to "lift the shadow of fear" from crime, sent Congress draft legislation to carry out his anti-crime program of more prosecutors, more jail cells, more mandatory sentences and harsher penalties for crimes committed with guns.

Speaking at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center here...Bush said his proposals to deal with criminals mean "pack a gun and we'll pack you away."

Bush called law enforcement officers "domestic freedom fighters in the war on crime (and) for this reason, you have a friend in the Oval Office."

Border Patrol trainee David Rivera of El Paso, Tex., seeking "words of wisdom," was told by Bush that "in spite of the suspicion or circumstantial evidence, an individual should be treated with respect and given his rights or her rights, even though the evidence looks overwhelming.... I think we've got to stand for that," Bush added.

S&L BAILOUT LEGISLATION PASSES HOUSE, 320 to 97 Attempts To Weaken Reforms Defeated

The House, responding to an appeal by President Bush, overwhelmingly passed legislation Thursday night to bail out and revamp the beleaguered S&L industry after defeating attempts to weaken its reforms.

The House voted 320 to 97 to pass the measure, which will pay off depositors at hundreds of insolvent S&Ls across the country at a cost of $300 billion over 30 years....

Minutes before the final vote, the House voted almost unanimously -- 411 to 8 -- to strip the bill of a number of special interest provisions that lawmakers had added to help companies in their districts....

The biggest defeat for Bush came as lawmakers voted, mostly along party lines, to place the entire bailout on the federal budget while exempting it from [Gramm-Rudman]. (Kathleen Day, Washington Post, A1)

House Passes S&L Bailout Bill

The House passed a landmark $285 billion bill Thursday to bail out ailing S&Ls and, in a rare defeat for S&L lobbyists, made thrift owners invest more of their own money in their institutions.

On a 320 to 97 vote, the House approved the measure sought by President Bush to ensure that people with funds in failed thrifts lose no deposits and that new reforms prevent a recurrence of the greed, fraud, mismanagement and lax regulator oversight that helped cause the crisis.

Aided by last-minute lobbying by Bush aimed at fellow Republicans, the House overwhelmingly killed an amendment that critics said would gut the bill's key reform -- increasing money owners must invest.

(Bud Newman, UPI)

HOUSE DEFEATS ATTEMPTS TO WEAKEN S&L BILL Lawmakers Heed Strong Appeal By Bush

The House, responding to a strong appeal from President Bush, Thursday defeated last-minute attempts by the S&L industry to weaken the reforms in the legislation to bail out the nation's beleaguered S&Ls.

Moving swiftly, the House defeated an amendment by Rep. Hyde that opponents said would make it more difficult for regulators to enforce new accounting standards for the industry.

The vote on the amendment was 326 to 94, with 114 Republicans joining 212 Democrats....

"The American people won a major victory today.... We commend the members of the House for their courageous action," Treasury Secretary Brady said through a spokesman.

But the House handed Bush a defeat on another key issue by voting, mostly along party lines, to place the entire bailout on the federal budget while exempting it from Gramm-Rudman.

House Backs Bush's Tougher Standards For Savings And Loans

The House backed President Bush's plan Thursday to toughen capital standards for the S&L industry -- but then invited a confrontation with the White House by including the costs of the bailout in the federal budget.

Under strong last-minute lobbying by Bush, the House solidly backed the tougher capital standards for the thrift industry, defeating 326 to 94 an amendment by Rep. Hyde that would have allowed thrifts to seek exemptions to the new standards from regulators.

"The Hyde amendment is predicated on the idea that the regulators did a good job," said Rep. Leach. "If they had done a good job, we would not be here."

NEW IRA GETS MIXED REVIEWS

A new form of individual retirement account under consideration by the Bush administration drew some praise Thursday from Capitol Hill, but economists and industry experts say it would not generate substantial improvement in the nation's saving rate....

One longtime advocate of IRAs, Sen. Roth, said he felt a bit upstaged by the news. Roth said he has planned to introduce legislation next week to create an IRA very similar to the one the administration has proposed, which would exempt from tax the withdrawals made at retirement rather than allow taxpayers to deduct their IRA contributions.

Despite feeling upstaged, Roth said he welcomes the possibility of gaining the White House as an ally. Sens. Dodd and D'Amato also welcomed the news at a hearing Thursday....

But Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bentsen...said:..." One of the problems is that you're talking about tax benefits that would come years down the road, and people have lost some confidence in tax laws remaining constant."

(Paul Blustein, Washington Post, F1)

SUBCOMMITTEE VOTES INCREASE IN A TAX, FIRST OF BUSH PRESIDENCY

For the first time since President Bush was elected on a no-tax-increase pledge, a congressional subcommittee has voted to raise taxes.

The House Ways and Means subcommittee on human resources is calling for a boost in the tax that employers pay for federal unemployment benefits.... When fully in effect in 1992, it would cost employers an additional $4 a year for each employee....

The package was approved by the subcommittee on a voice vote over Republican opposition.

GROUPS SAY CLEAN AIR BILL NEEDS WORK

President Bush's proposals to revitalize the Clean Air Act are a welcome step but lack specifics to assure they will work, a broad coalition of environmental and public health groups said Thursday in their first detailed response to the plan.

While hailing the proposals as ending a decade of political stalemate, the National Clean Air Coalition urged the administration to set more stringent deadlines, provide better oversight and enforcement measures and tighten some pollution standards.

"They fell short in a number of ways," said Richard Ayres, coalition chairman, at a news conference. (Kathy Sawyer, Washington Post, A9)

Environmentalists: Bush Too Soft On Auto Industry

A coalition of environmental groups Thursday criticized President Bush's clean air proposals for being too soft on the auto industry.

The environmentalists, while saying they were encouraged by Bush's commitment to clean air, also said there were "loopholes" in his proposals for reducing toxic air pollution and for controlling acid rain....

"President Bush's proposal would impose only token new requirements on GM, and presumably other automakers as well," said National Clean Air Coalition chairman Richard Ayres.

Ayres also criticized Bush's "heavy emphasis" on encouraging cars that run on alternative fuels such as methanol, which may simply produce a different type of poisonous air pollution.

"He's made a commitment to a particular alternative fuel prior to many questions about it being answered," Ayres said. "It's a little like trading Roger Clemens for future draft picks." (Mike Wagner, Newhouse)

KEMP VOWS TO OVERHAUL AGENCY
HUD Investigation Goes Nationwide

HUD Secretary Kemp pledged to a congressional committee Thursday that he will reform his agency "top to bottom" in the wake of allegations of mismanagement, saying all programs and field offices will be subject to review.

Testifying before the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, Kemp said he had asked the agency's inspector general for a full investigation of charges and has referred some cases to the Justice Department in an effort to recover stolen or misapplied funds.

"I personally will not tolerate any abuse of this high public trust," he said. "You have my personal pledge as well as my public pledge."

The investigation into problems at HUD expanded Thursday when Attorney General Thornburgh instructed U.S. attorneys around the country to look into improper conduct at the housing agency's field offices. (Barbara Vobejda, Washington Post, A8)

COURT NARROWS SCOPE OF '76 RIGHTS RULING
Bias-Law Enforcement To Suffer, Lawyers Say

The Supreme Court declined Thursday to overturn a landmark 1976 civil rights decision but narrowed the scope of the ruling in such a way that civil rights lawyers said will severely curtail effective enforcement of federal anti-discrimination laws....

In an opinion by Justice Kennedy, the court unanimously backed away from reversing Runyon v. McCrary, saying that "Whether Runyon's interpretation of (the 1866 law)...is right or wrong...Runyon is entirely consistent with our society's deep commitment to the eradication of discrimination based on a person's race or the color of his or her skin."

Although reaffirming Runyon, Kennedy did not say it was correctly decided, only that the legal doctrine of stare decisis -- meaning "to stand by things decided" -- requires special reasons to overturn a ruling and that no special justification could be found....

Alan Slobodin, an attorney with the conservative Washington Legal Foundation, called the ruling "a field goal but not a touchdown..." ...

Civil rights groups...condemned the ruling...calling it "dishonest" and "conservative judicial activism." (Al Kamen, Washington Post, A1)

CHILD CARE REACHES SENATE FLOOR BUT PARTISAN BATTLES LINGER

A multibillion dollar plan offering parents both subsidies and tax credits to help pay for child care faces stiff opposition from the White House, which favors an approach dependent almost solely on tax credits.

The Senate on Thursday started debate on the issue, with Democrats saying they are open to compromise but committed to the principals of the Act for Better Child Care sponsored by Sen. Dodd. (John King, AP)

REPUBLICAN PARTY CHIEFS ENDORSE AGGRESSIVE TACTICS, RALLY BEHIND ATWATER

Republican party leaders Thursday called for a continuation of aggressive campaign tactics against the Democrats and rallied behind party chairman Atwater, who has been under fire for an RNC memo attacking Speaker Foley.

"Lee has very strong and steady support from the members of the National Committee," said Jennifer Dunn, the Washington state chairman.

The reaction to the RNC memo by party leaders, who began three days of meetings here Thursday, contrasted sharply with the response of Republican elected officials last week....

"I found the memo not in our best interests," said Frank Visco, California state chairman. But he said he was certain "Lee Atwater had nothing to do with it."

"I would agree it was a mistake, but I think (Atwater) is a great chairman," said Mike Grebe, Wisconsin state chairman.

U.S. POSITION ON STRATEGIC ARMS UNSETTLED

The Bush administration likely will not have set its negotiating positions on strategic nuclear arms before official resumption of talks with the Soviet Union Monday, administration officials said Thursday.

President Bush discussed the issue with members of the NSC Thursday but made no decisions on such key issues as whether to allow mobile land-based nuclear missiles, the officials said.

Bush and his senior aides have said the administration's position will not vary much from that urged by former President Reagan....

Officials said Thursday, for example, that Bush is unlikely to propose new initiatives on two principle topics disputed with the Soviets: tests of ballistic-missile defense technologies and deployment of sea-launched cruise missiles. In both, the administration will continue to resist constraints, [they] said. (R. Jeffrey Smith, Washington Post, A34)

U.S. Offers New Plan To Help Smooth Arms Talks

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have suggested a new approach for counting air-launched cruise missiles that could help close the gap between Washington and Moscow on the issue, administration officials said Thursday.

The Joint Chiefs' approach was disclosed as President Bush convened a meeting of the NSC Thursday to discuss initiatives that the U.S. may present...in Geneva Monday.

Administration officials said President Bush had decided against any fundamental changes in the U.S. negotiating stand, though some important modifications may be made. (Michael Gordon, New York Times, A6)

WALL NOT 'ETERNAL,' GORBACHEV SAYS New Conditions Could Make It 'Disappear'

BONN -- Soviet President Gorbachev suggested Thursday that the Berlin Wall, the most powerful symbol of the division between East and West, might someday be torn down, saying, "Nothing is eternal in this world."

Gorbachev said that the wall, whose destruction has been urged in dramatic fashion by Presidents Bush and Reagan during visits to West Germany, "could disappear once the conditions that created the need for it disappear."

Speaking at a news conference on the final day of his visit here, the Soviet leader also declined, in his first extensive public statement on the situation in China, to criticize the Beijing government.... But he added that "we regret some aspects of what has happened." ...

Gorbachev also said that he felt the NATO proposal endorsed last month in Brussels on reducing conventional arms in Europe could help the two sides reach an agreement more quickly than previously expected, but he added that "the document contains a lot of old thinking" and "merely new rhetoric and packaging." (David Remnick, Washington Post, A29)

PARTY OFFICIALS BLAMED FOR UZBEK CLASHES
Violence 'Planned,' Says Soviet Premier

MOSCOW -- Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov Thursday accused acquiescent Communist Party officials and unidentified political opponents of responsibility for ethnic violence in Uzbekistan, the bloodiest in the Soviet Union for many years.

Speaking at the end of a four-day tour of the region, where about 100 deaths have been reported in the last three weeks, Ryzhkov described the disturbances as a "well-planned, large-scale, and skillfully implemented political action." ...

Over the last few years, hundreds of prominent Uzbek officials have lost their jobs or been sent to prison after being accused of corruption and bribery. Some Soviet news media have suggested that the ethnic violence could have been intended as a provocation against reform-minded Soviet leaders, including President Gorbachev, who have encouraged the corruption probe.

FORMER CUBAN GENERAL SAYS ARRESTS IN CUBA SYMPTOM OF UNREST

A Cuban general who defected to the U.S. in 1987 said Thursday the arrest in Cuba of high-ranking figures was an emergency step to stem the spread of discontent with President Fidel Castro's leadership.

Brig. Gen. Rafael del Pino, Castro's former air chief in Angola, said...it was significant that Cuban Defense Minister Raul Castro, the president's brother, on explaining the arrests to Cuba's top military commanders warned that there would not be any Soviet-style reform in Cuba.

"I believe that in this case Cuban counter-intelligence discovered a high degree of discontent among the officers of the armed forces, which could have caused an uprising," del Pino said.

"They have taken urgent measures to eradicate the danger at its center," he said in a telephone news conference arranged by the Cuban American National Foundation.

NO ACCORD OR EVEN TALKS IN SIGHT
AFTER SECOND OAS PANAMA VISIT

PANAMA CITY -- The second visit by an OAS mission to seek solutions to Panama's crisis over annulled elections ended with no visible progress and a large degree of confusion over what they were trying to achieve....

[Gen. Noriega's] civilian supporters said they were ready to talk and accused the opposition of intransigence while the opposition expressed anger, frustration and confusion over the OAS mission and what its real goals were.

"The focus they have given this (visit) is not that of the resolution," said opposition vice-presidential candidate Guillermo Ford, referring to the OAS resolution approved [calling for a transfer of power from Noriega to the opposition].

BRADY URGES BANKERS TO AGREE WITH MEXICO ON DEBT

Treasury Secretary Brady prodded Congress and commercial banks Thursday to carry out make-it-or-break-it responsibilities to ensure success of the Bush administration plan to ease Third World debt.

Testifying before the Senate foreign operations subcommittee, Brady appealed to Congress to honor U.S. commitments in paying its share for World Bank operations -- after missing two scheduled contributions -- so the bank can play a key role in the Brady Plan.

And Brady said the time had come for private creditors to agree with debtor countries -- chiefly, Mexico, at this time -- to reduce debtor burdens....

Although Brady noted the Mexican talks were going slowly, he told reporters after the hearing, "In no sense do I think we're behind schedule."

TRADE DEFICIT AGAIN SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

The government said Thursday that the U.S. trade deficit shrank dramatically to $8.26 billion in April, its lowest level in nine months, but even the Bush administration is concerned that the strong dollar could stunt future progress....

Commerce Secretary Mosbacher hailed the report as evidence of "continued improvement in U.S. trade performance" but he added a note of caution.

"While the April data are encouraging, it is always unwise to put too much weight on any one or two months' figures in these volatile statistics," he said. "The recent strength of the dollar leads us to be concerned about the economy's ability to sustain the excellent trends seen so far."

DOLLAR TUMBLES IN TOKYO

The U.S. dollar tumbled more than 6 yen in Tokyo Friday under pressure of profit-taking prompted by the Bank of Japan's determined yen-supporting intervention.

The dollar closed at 145.05 yen...the central bank said. (UPI)

JAPAN SAYS IT HELD CONSULTATIONS WITH U.S., NOT NEGOTIATIONS

TOKYO -- Japan's foreign ministry disputed a U.S. assertion Thursday that bilateral negotiations officially have begun under the strengthened U.S. trade law.

Seiichi Kondo, ministry international press division director, said Deputy U.S. Trade Representative S. Linn Williams was out of line when he said in Tokyo that bilateral meetings held here this week amounted to consultations as defined by the 1988 law.

"The U.S. side never said that at the meetings," Kondo said in an interview. "We did not consider this the start of negotiations." ...

"We do consider the discussions at Kawana to be consultations within the meaning of our trade act," said Williams at a news briefing Thursday.

During a separate briefing earlier Thursday, a Japanese official confirmed that his government was considering a face-saving format under which Japan could treat Super 301 talks as discussions while the U.S. could consider them to be negotiations.

U.S. WON'T LET CHINESE MASSACRE AFFECT TIES WITH DENG, OFFICIAL SAYS

The U.S. still can do business with Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping despite his military crackdown and the massacre of hundreds -- perhaps thousands -- of people, a senior Bush administration official says.

The U.S. position as outlined Thursday by the senior administration official went far beyond public pronouncements from the White House or State Department....

"Despite the crackdown," the official said, "China has come a long way since 1972" when Washington reestablished ties with Beijing....

"I think they have made a decision that they're going to restore order and that they're going to try to rediscipline the system," the official, who spoke with four reporters on the condition of anonymity, said. "It is not so clear that they have made a major reversal in course and will not resume a path like they were on before. I think it's premature to make that decision."

SHANGHAI COURT ISSUES FIRST KNOWN DEATH SENTENCES SINCE MASSACRE

BEIJING -- A Shanghai court Thursday sentenced to death three men accused of helping to burn a train, the first time an order for capital punishment has been announced since soldiers crushed seven weeks of prodemocracy demonstrations earlier this month....

It was unclear whether the government, which Thursday pressed its tough nationwide crackdown on dissent with new arrests, intends to deal as harshly with students accused of organizing the mass demonstrations.

(John Burgess, Washington Post, A30)

CLIMATE OF FEAR GRIPS CHINA Crackdown Sparks Resurgence Of Xenophobia

BEIJING -- ...For seven weeks before the deadly June 3-4 assault...on Tiananmen Square, the focus of seven weeks of unprecedented prodemocracy demonstrations, Beijing glowed red hot with political debate and discussion not seen in 40 years of communist rule....

Now, with the crackdown on all dissent, suspicion is reigning again, governing all personal dealings....

Many Beijing people have seemed shocked by videotaped scenes of violence by demonstrators [and] close-ups of the blackened corpses of soldiers who died in fire-bombed vehicles....

Still, many analysts here feel that the government will not attempt to turn the country back to the mass hysteria and xenophobia of the...Cultural Revolution.... Too many doors have been opened in the meantime to make that possible.

HUNGARY

ABC's Peter Jennings: We are here in Budapest tonight for one of the most important occasions of the Soviet bloc since the Soviets made Eastern Europe a prison at the end of World War II. Tomorrow, here, where the students fought tanks 30 years before the Beijing Spring, we're going to witness the astonishing sight of a Communist Party admitting that crushing a revolution and executing its leaders was a mistake. (ABC-Lead)

CHINA

NBC's Tom Brokaw: Good evening from Beijing, where there are indications tonight that China's aging communist rulers now are taking a slightly softer tone. They're talking about the need to heal relations between the army and the people, and for the first time since the Tiananmen Square massacre, the official news broadcasts were saying the Communist Party may have made some errors. But contrast that softer tone with this reality: three young men sentenced to death for rioting and burning a rail car, shutting down rail traffic for three days in Shanghai. In northwest China, a show trial, 26 workers paraded before a packed hall -- a scene recalling China's ideological madness, the Cultural Revolution of Chairman Mao. These men were sentenced to work camps. This young Chinese will not get off as lightly. Workers say he has confessed to killing a soldier the weekend of the Tiananmen massacre. That soldier has been mourned on state television every night this week, but still no word on the dead and wounded students.... (NBC-Lead)

ABC's Sam Donaldson: In China today, death was the sentence today for three men who had demonstrated for democracy. The verdict was announced as Chinese television began broadcasting the first trials of some of those arrested since the government crackdown began. The three men sentenced to death were accused of starting a riot in China's largest city, Shanghai.

ABC's Jim Laurie reports that in the first show trials of the crackdown, one after another, three men were sentenced to death. The sentence here is usually carried out within one month by a bullet to the back of the head. They have three days to appeal. The men were accused of setting ablaze a Chinese train last week after it plowed into protesting students, killing six. No one on the train was injured. In northeast China, 26 workers were put on display, accused of disrupting public transport and trying to organize labor strikes. They were sentenced to several years of hard labor. Chinese leaders today called on the nation to increase ideological training in schools. (ABC-3)

CBS's Dan Rather: Once again today the communist leaders of China stepped up their terror and their pressure in the campaign to humiliate and destroy supporters of democracy. The new shadow on the scene today was that of the hangman. (CBS-Lead)

S&Ls

Donaldson: The House voted overwhelmingly today against an amendment which would have weakened the bill to reform the S&L industry. President Bush and congressional leaders joined to back the amendment, which would have allowed some S&L operators to get around strict requirements that they risk more of their money.

ABC's Jim Wooten reports that Rep. Michel, appealed to his fellow Republicans to reject this Republican's efforts to weaken the S&L bail-out bill broadly backed by Democrats and by the Republican President.

(Rep. Hyde: "Part of this bill is radically wrong, and perpetrates an egregious injustice.")

What Henry Hyde doesn't like in the bill is a requirement for S&L institutions to put up more hard cash as capital. Why not decide that on a case-by-case basis, he suggests, which is precisely what the powerful S&L lobby also wants. And after $4½ million in political contributions in the last six years, the S&L lobby usually gets what it wants from Congress -- usually, but not today. Today the President's lobbies were out in force pressing his case on anybody who would listen, and it worked, with Democratic support.

(Rep. Cooper: "Let this House not cave in to the S&L industry one more time.")

And lo and behold, they didn't: 322 against the amendment, 96 in favor.

(ABC-5)

CBS's Terence Smith reports that the House today beat back an amendment to President Bush's massive S&L bail-out plan that would have reduced the amount of money the owners of some thrifts are required to invest in their own institutions.

(Rep. Schumer: "What this amendment does is allow those very weak institutions to delay and delay and delay the day of reckoning.")

(Rep. Leach: "The fact of the matter is in the S&L industry the wings are falling off. It's time we toughen regulation.")

And toughen they did, largely as a result of pressure from President Bush on Republicans who have been heavily lobbied by the S&L industry. His letter to House leaders today warned "this matter goes to the very heart of my determination to clean up the abuses of the past among the Savings and Loans about which every voter is entitled to be outraged." The outraged S&L industry argued that the tougher capital requirements will only threaten more thrifts. How to pay for the bail-out? The House voted to add it on to the budget deficit, rejecting an Administration accounting device to keep it off.

(Rep. Rostenkowski: "The Administration can try to hide the problem from the public by placing such an agency off budget. But we simply cannot hide the cost.")

(CBS-5)

IRAN-CONTRA

NBC's Garrick Utley: The Senate Intelligence Committee has been investigating whether the White House withheld documents from Congress' Iran-Contra hearings. Now NBC's Andrea Mitchell has learned that the Senate committee will issue a report next week clearing the White House of those charges. Sources tell her that the committee questioned 100 witnesses and found no evidence of a cover-up.

(NBC-7)

ANTI-CRIME

Donaldson: President Bush wanted to get some extra publicity today as he formally introduced his $1.2 billion anti-crime package in Congress. So the President flew down to the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center in Glynco, Ga., to sign the draft legislation and reiterate the proposals he made last month for tougher sentences involving gun-related crimes and the construction of more federal prisons. One of the President's specific proposals is to increase to 10 years the mandatory sentence for the use of a semi-automatic weapon in a violent or drug-related crime. It's an effort to toughen federal gun laws. Local laws and local police departments are using more and more of the federal laws. (ABC-7)

GORBACHEV

Donaldson reports that today for the first time, Soviet leader Gorbachev spoke with reporters about the repression in China. He said the Soviet Union is extremely concerned about what's happening there, and he warned that failure of reform in China would undermine efforts to ease world tensions.

ABC's Rick Inderfurth reports that Mikhail Gorbachev used his farewell news conference to reinforce the new image of the Soviet Union as a partner, not a threat. Is the Cold War over?

(Gorbachev: "We have moved out of the period of Cold War. We have moved beyond the Cold War.")

Will the Berlin Wall come down?

(Gorbachev: "It could disappear once the conditions that generated the need for it disappear. I do not see much of a problem here.")

Is it possible to remove the threat of war in Europe?

(Gorbachev: "We want conventional arms and armed forces to be reduced to a level that would rule out the possibility of offensive action.")

Gorbachev then left Bonn, taking a prototype high-speed train to the industrial region of the Ruhr Valley to promote economic ties between the two countries. There he received yet another tumultuous welcome, this time from steel workers, a further indication that his message is hitting home. During his visit here two weeks ago, President Bush challenged Mikhail Gorbachev to tear down the Berlin Wall. The Soviet leader left today without going that far, but other barriers that have long divided the Soviets and West Germans are now lower because he was here. (ABC-4)

Utley reports that Mikhail Gorbachev spoke out for the first time about the suppression of the democracy movement in China. He picked his words very carefully. He said he regretted some of the things which have happened in China. He added, if the Chinese reform movement stops it could "cause major damage to the process of improving relations throughout the world." (NBC-2, CBS-2)

SUPREME COURT

Donaldson reports that the Supreme Court today handed down a civil rights ruling that contained both good and bad news for civil rights activists. The court reaffirmed its own 1976 ruling which upheld a 19th Century law that forbids racial discrimination. But at the same time the court said the law cannot be used to bar racial harassment. And that, said civil rights groups, is another setback.

ABC's Tim O'Brien reports that though some of the justices think the '76 decision was wrong, they agreed unanimously that it had good results. In the words of Justice Kennedy, "It was entirely consistent with society's deep commitment to the eradication of race-based discrimination." While the court declined to overrule itself and the ban on discrimination in private contracts will continue, minorities did not get anything new out of today's ruling, and no one in the civil rights community is declaring victory.

ABC's John Martin reports that today the Supreme Court also affirmed the presumption for the first time that whoever is the husband of the mother is the father of the child. It also upheld a father's right to a hearing. The court applied an 18th Century social doctrine to 20th Century family life and said the family is paramount. But it also left room for the first time for courts to hear the pleas of fathers and their children. (ABC-2, NBC-4, CBS-6)

NORIEGA

Utley reports that investigators wanted more hard evidence of the money Panama's Gen. Noriega has made through drug trafficking. Now they believe they have found it -- more than 1,000 pages of documents of Noriega's secret numbered bank accounts overseas.

NBC's Brian Ross reports that American authorities say they consider these bank documents to be the smoking gun in the drug case against Noriega. The documents were seized last October in London by British authorities after the bank used by Noriega was itself indicted in a drug money case in Florida. After months of going through all the documents seized in the bank, British authorities this week turned over 12 boxes of material, including the records of as many as seven secret accounts controlled by Noriega. The records show that Noriega, while receiving an army salary of about $50,000 a year, deposited at least $50 million since he opened the accounts in early 1982. According to authorities who have seen the bank records, a key document is a letter from Noriega to his banker, now under arrest in Florida, instructing the banker that the accounts must be kept secret and that no bank statements ever be sent to Noriega in Panama. Authorities believe that most of the money comes from Noriega's dealings with Colombian drug bosses, with international arms dealers, and with the CIA, which had Noriega on the payroll. Authorities say one transaction in particular stands out: The day after Noriega was indicted on drug charges, $27 million of Noriega's money was transferred out of a secret account in London to another secret account in Luxembourg -- money American authorities may now try to seize. (NBC-3)

STEALTH

Rather says that U.S. Defense Department officials today tried to talk up to Congress and to the public the high-tech Stealth bomber.

CBS's David Martin reports that the Pentagon revealed today that it already has spent $22.4 billion on the Stealth bomber. Today the deputy secretary of defense told Congress he is not sure exactly what the final bill will be.

(Donald Atwood: "You really need more data to be perfectly firm in your figures, because frankly we haven't flown this one yet.")

(Sen. Exon: "It's my view that as costly as it is, the B-2 is a major leap forward.")

The Pentagon has revealed almost nothing about what makes the plane so revolutionary, and members of Congress are demanding more information be made public.

(Sen. Nunn: "We're going to have to declassify a lot of things if the B-2 is going to fly.")

It's first flight will be close to the 4th of July.

TRADE DEFICIT/DOLLAR

Donaldson reports that the nation's foreign trade gap narrowed sharply in April, good news -- down more than 13% to about $8½ billion. Exports of American products reached record levels for a second consecutive month. (ABC-6, CBS-9)

Utley reports that in Tokyo the dollar was at its highest level in 22 months. The strong dollar was a major reason for stock prices to fall on Wall Street. (NBC-5)

NUCLEAR WEAPONS PLANTS

Utley reports that at the Rocky Flats plant in Denver, the FBI added more agents to its investigation of whether plant officials covered up illegal dumping of hazardous waste, including plutonium that has spread beyond the Rocky Flats complex.

NBC's Roger O'Neil reports that some of the highest levels of radioactive plutonium in the world have been found in soil samples taken as far as three miles from the nuclear weapons plant. This, according to a study by the EPA. And according to the Colorado Health Department, people living near the plant are breathing tiny particles of plutonium which are being emitted from plant smokestacks.

Utley reports that there is a new problem at the Turkey Point nuclear power plant near Miami. Three plant employees are charged with distributing cocaine at the plant. (NBC-6)

Rather reports that federal officials got an earful at a public hearing today on proposals to salt away tons of radioactive waste in a salt mine.

CBS's Scott Pelley reports that in a series of public meetings, DOE officials are hearing loud opposition to a plan for solving a chronic national dilemma. Many state officials want sites holding radioactive debris from defense plants cleaned up now. DOE wants to stack the debris in barrels in rooms of a huge salt mine -- cost, $700 million. When all of the barrels are in place the room will be filled with salt. And then slowly, over a period of about 100 years, the cavern will contract, sealing the nuclear waste in a rock-hard tomb. Opponents say the site is unstable. DOE insists it is safe. DOE wants to open the site in September, but lawsuits are threatened, and it may be the courts that decide whether the state that gave birth to the nuclear bomb will become the gravesite for its legacy.

Rather: And new fallout tonight from the case of another nuclear defense plant and its angry neighbors in Ohio. Gary Reeves reports on the Fernald uranium processing plant and questions of contamination, credibility and liability.

CBS's Gary Reeves reports that a Cincinnati jury today struck a serious blow against the nuclear weapons industry. It recommended $137 million in a judgement against National Ladd (phonetic) of Ohio. The plaintiffs were ecstatic, but the judgement is not legally binding. National Ladd admits to releasing tons of Uranium dust into the air and radium-tainted water into a nearby river during its 32 years of operations. But it maintained that with rare exceptions there was never any life-threatening contamination of off-site property. Residents are afraid that past exposure may cause cancer. (CBS-8)

AIDS

Rather: The FDA approved the use of aerosol pentamidine for treatment of AIDS patients. The action came as the Centers for Disease Control for the first time recommended a major effort to help people with the AIDS virus before they develop symptoms. The CDC urged the use of aerosol pentamidine and another drug recently shown to ward off the pneumonia that is already a killer of AIDS victims. (CBS-7)

HOSTAGE

Rather: Moslem kidnappers in Lebanon released a Belgian hostage today, 32-year-old Dr. Yan Cools had been held for 13 months. At least 14 foreigners are still hostages in Lebanon, including nine Americans. (CBS-4)

CONGRESS/POSTAGE

Utley reports that Common Cause has for the first time analyzed how much Congress has used the privilege of mailing letters without paying postage. In a new report, Common Cause says in the past two years the cost of senators using the privilege was almost $53 million. The senators who used their free mail the most were those running for re-election. (NBC-9)

EDITORIALS/COLUMNISTS

NATO/SOVIETS

In Europe, Bush Is Thinking Big -- "...Bush's 'Beyond Containment' strategy is an ambitious effort not only to respond to the Gorbachev challenge in Europe but to manage the German problem as well. Here Bush has done something his critics have frequently suggested he could not do -- he embraced a big idea and set out to implement it.... The unadvertised element in the president's Beyond Containment approach is his acceptance of the need for a dramatic change in NATO as large-scale conventional-arms reductions take place and open us a vacuum in Eastern Europe.... The Bush foreign policy team does not seem to worry that West Germany is wandering away from the Common Market -- why quit an organization you can so easily dominate? -- or NATO, which Bonn has now shown it can block on German-related issues. This White House worries, sensibly, about how West Germany will use the enormous economic power it is accumulating. By making the Beyond Containment strategy one that points west as well as east, Bush, has shown a surprising, and promising, awareness of the nature of the changes rolling over the continent."

(Jim Hoagland, Washington Post, 6/15)

Moscow's View: The Bush Proposal On European Arms -- "...It does not make any difference to us who takes the palm of leadership in advancing some or other idea. The important thing is that this idea should work toward a final result of a reduction of mountains of arms and promote security. It is from this standpoint that we appraise the initiatives announced by President Bush in Brussels.... We would like to hope for a similar response from the U.S. that might give impetus to the talks on questions of space weapons and compliance with the Treaty on Anti-Ballistic Missiles, in drafting an agreement on 50 percent cuts in strategic offensive arms, in working out an underground nuclear test verification system and in banning chemical weapons and eliminating their stockpiles.... We consider totally unjustified the inclusion by the U.S. of a purely defensive weapon, fighter-interceptor aircraft, into the category of aircraft slated for reduction. There is a common understanding that it is offensive systems, systems insuring a surprise attack capability, that should be reduced. This means that we still need to find ways for bringing the positions closer together. One can welcome the readiness expressed by the United States to discuss certain limits on the numerical strength of armed forces. However, the proposed limits are too narrow.... We regard the absence, in President Bush's statement, of a positive official response to the Warsaw Pact proposal for immediate talks on short-range, tactical nuclear weapons in Europe as a deficiency, and a serious one. We stand for a parallel solution to both the problem of conventional armaments and the problem of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe. It is the only possible way to attain the commonly affirmed goal of all parties to the talks in Vienna: to achieve a reduction of arms in Europe that would insure the restructuring of the armed forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact on a purely defensive basis that would preclude every possibility of conducting large-scale offensive operations. I would like to hope that common sense would prevail in the sphere of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe the way it has prevailed in other spheres."

(Victor Karpov, New York Times, 6/12)

Europe Heading For 'Honeytrap'? -- "...It is not altogether clear how successful Bush has been at altering the basic perception that it remains Gorbachev who is initiating, and Bush responding to the lessening of tensions in Europe.... We should not be losing a public relations game to Gorbachev.... There is no reason to write off European youth as decadent and uninspired by liberty, but to win we must make our ideology supreme. The problem is that pragmatic Republicans cannot bring themselves to take ideology seriously. Consequently, while increased freedoms are on the lips of citizens in China and the Soviet Union, America is losing the ideological struggle for Europe's soul.... Perhaps we have watched over and protected Europeans for too long and turned them into a people who are now in the process of discarding their American parents for Soviet parents."

(Paul Craig Roberts, Providence Journal, 6/12)

Best of Reagan -- "Before George Bush's successful trip to Europe for the 40th anniversary of NATO, the president was wistfully compared in many quarters to Ronald Reagan and found wanting. There was little justification for such a conclusion then and even less now as Bush deals with the developments in China and Iran.... During his four-nation European tour, Bush demonstrated that he embodies the best aspects of Reagan's presidency -- effective leadership and prudent policy and more. Bush's proposal for conventional arms cuts in Europe, for instance, refocused NATO upon the primary Soviet threat, an invasion of Western Europe. The well-planned European trip and the quick, firm response to the violence in China indicate that, unlike Reagan, Bush is not a slave to public relations and can lead his own administration in making detailed policy."

(Houston Chronicle, 6/7)

Cold War Still Far From Over -- "...Constant reminders of Soviet failures have to be grating in Moscow. Bush's words are, in a way, further rebuttals, 33 years later, to Nikita Khrushchev's claim that 'history is on our side.... We will bury you.' The taunts echoed for years in U.S. foreign policy debates. There are no such menacing words from Bush, but what he's saying may have a political echo inside the Soviet Union, with opponents of the Gorbachev course. Then again, Bush also has a hard-line conservative bloc to handle at home. His emphasis on 'the momentum for freedom' as western political and economic ideas move eastward will soften conservative opposition to his arms-control ideas...."

(Walter Mears, Cincinnati Enquirer, 6/7)

Optimistic Caution Serves Bush Well -- "We have a foreign policy. Took a few months to work out, and contains at least one large hole, but Americans can be proud of the way their president used a NATO alliance impasse to change the focus of superpower negotiations. The focus had been on nuclear arms reduction, as the Soviets wanted, but if we agreed to reduce nukes first, their conventional strength would have guaranteed them military superiority for years.... A close reading of his Brussels press conference reveals Bush to be the first U.S. president since Richard Nixon to be in full intellectual command of his national security policy."

Dear Mrs. Riley:

This was supposed to be a message of birthday greetings, but I fear it's a bit too late even for belated greetings. No matter though, a special occasion is not necessary to recognize a special person.

In the hectic pace of life, it's easy to lose sight of what really matters in this world, of what really makes a difference in a person's life. But your son Raymond, through his letter, has given me a powerful reminder of what indeed matters -- the generous love, charitable spirit and steadfast faith with which you have led your life. My message is simply an appreciative word for the inspiration you provide. A little love does go a long way, and yours has obviously been much more than a little.

Best wishes and God bless you.

The People Deserve Better

The spectacle of White House Chief of Staff John Sununu engaging in a dirty little fight with a fellow Republican, congressman "Chuck" Douglas, is somewhat less than edifying.

All it proves, if it proves anything at all, is that meanspirited demagoguery regrettably infects even the high and mighty and that intelligence and common sense are not synonyms.

It is doubtful that the public gives a tinker's damn whether Sununu and co-inhabitants of that proverbial "fishbowl."

But we're sure that the Republic will still stand if Sununu and Douglas don't fall all over each other in friendly embrace and if Nancy continues to fold her arms and declines to shake the affable Douglas' hand.

What is not acceptable is the heavy-handed move by Sununu to try to destroy Douglas' personal reputation by slyly impugning his moral standards. That's simply vicious. It's so far beneath the dignity of the important office that Sununu holds that it wouldn't be too surprising if the President himself finally insists that this stupid feud end before it gets so far out of hand that it affects the office of the Presidency.

Granted, Douglas is in a vulnerable position. His third divorce is not a happy time in his life. But why kick the man when he is down? Why did Sununu take this occasion to attack Douglas "lifestyle" and sanctimoniously to proclaim that Nancy has "a complete lack of respect" for Douglas and won't shake his hand because she "has a very strong feeling about family values" and thus finds it hard to accept the former state Supreme Court justice?

That kind of sanctimonious priggery is not only alien to New Hampshire, where most folk are tolerant or at least publicly non-judgmental about their neighbors' marital problems, but also it suggests that Nancy is going to have to keep her hands in her pockets the entire time she is in Washington!

Douglas, it would seem, need not prove his point when he says that the Sununus are being "childish and immature" and adds that "we can disagree on a candidate or an issue without having to be immature about it."

"Other than the two Sununus," he told our White House correspondent, Tom Gorey, "there has been no one when I go up to New Hampshire who has not been civil to me in a social setting."

It would be surprising if it were otherwise in the "live free" state

JOHN SUNUNU

Douglas, two highly intelligent, highly ambitious and exceedingly proud public officials, are personally fond of each other. Especially where talented, assertive people are concerned, sometimes personality gears simply don't mesh. What of it?

But the people have every right to insist that their elected and appointed representatives maintain a certain level of decorum and civility in their dealings with each other.

It is regrettable that former Governor Sununu feels he must maintain an air of cool aloofness and that Nancy Sununu declines even to shake Douglas' proffered hand at public events. After all, the exchange of pleasantries on such occasions is largely ceremonial, a matter of form and basic courtesy, a recognition of the fact that all politicians serve at

Governor Calls Personal, Political Rift Counterproductive to GOP

By DONN TIBBETTS
State House Bureau Chief

CONCORD — Gov. Judd Gregg said yesterday the personal feud between Nancy Sununu and Rep. Chuck Douglas, R-N.H., is counterproductive to the Republican Party.

"Of course it is. It would be nice if everybody in our party was always on a very congenial level and I hope that we can get everybody back to a fairly congenial level and we'll work on that," he said.

"But the fact is that politics can get intense and sometimes it flips over into personalities. I've tried to always avoid that in my campaigns and my approach to government, but it is a fact of life and government," he said.

"I just hope we can get over this hurdle and that the parties involved will be willing to sit down and talk to each other and put this behind us," Gregg said.

Asked if he personally would try to mediate between Mrs. Sununu, wife of White House

"I just hope we can get over this hurdle and that the parties involved will be willing to sit down and talk to each other and put this behind us."

Gov. Judd Gregg

Chief of Staff John Sununu, and Douglas, Gregg said, "I thought about that, but I think the parties are mature enough to work it out between them. But if they seek third-party counsel and arbitration, I'd be happy to participate."

Gregg said the Norris Cotton Republican of the Year Award Dinner in Manchester Tuesday night was "extremely successful."

However, at that session, the personal disagreement between Mrs. Sununu, former state GOP chairman, and 2nd District Congressman Douglas, did not smooth out.

Mrs. Sununu, who has criticized Douglas for a "loose lifestyle," told reporters she has disliked Douglas for the past 15 years.

Douglas, who had termed Mrs. Sununu "immature" for refusing to shake hands in the past, wasn't phased by her comment and said there "are probably some other people who don't like me and that's their right."

Former Gov. John Sununu and his wife backed Betty Tamposi in the election last year for the seat Douglas won.

Last winter, Gregg was upset because he felt John Sununu had snubbed him by hosting the Governor's Ski Race at Waterville Valley after Gregg had taken office as the new governor.

THE WORLD

Bolivia gunmen kill 2 Mormons

LA PAZ, Bolivia — Two U.S. Mormon missionaries were shot and killed in downtown La Paz, and a group that tried to kill former U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz last summer claimed responsibility.

Todd Ray Wilson, 19, and Jeffrey Brent Ball, 21, both of Utah, were returning home late Wednesday when unidentified men shot them with machine guns.

One of the victims died immediately, the other died en route to hospital.

A radical leftist group, Zarate Willka Armed Liberation Front, claimed responsibility in a written statement distributed to La Paz newspapers.

"The violation of our sovereignty cannot go unpunished," the front said in a statement.

"The Yankee invaders who come to massacre our fellow farmers, be warned. We the poor have no other road than to rise up in arms. Our hatred is implacable and our war is to the death."

Police said they have no suspects in the killings.

No further details on the shooting were immediately available.

"It is a tragedy that we condemn and feel terrible about," said a spokesman for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said several churches have been damaged by bomb attacks in recent months.
